PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioner respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

OPINIONS BELOW

The decision of the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit is reported at 2024 WL 1070655 and reproduced at Appendix (“Pet. App.”) 1a. The decision of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida was made from the bench, and the transcript of the decision is reproduced at Pet. App. 3a. The magistrate judge’s report & recommendation is reproduced at Pet. App. 9a.

JURISDICTION

The Eleventh Circuit filed a per curiam decision on March 12, 2024. Pet. App. 1a. On May 30, 2024, on Petitioner’s application, Justice Thomas extended the time to file a petition for certiorari through and including July 10, 2024. This petition is timely, and the Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Second Amendment provides:

A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.

18 U.S.C. 922(g)(1) provides:

It shall be unlawful for any person who has been convicted in any court of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year . . . to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

I. Legal Background

In District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008), this Court recognized that the Second Amendment conferred an individual right to possess handguns in the home for self-defense. Id. at 635–36.

After Heller, the Eleventh Circuit had occasion to pass on the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1), i.e., the federal felon-in-possession ban. See United States v. Rozier, 598 F.3d 768 (11th Cir. 2010). The Eleventh Circuit rejected the challenge because one’s status as a felon “substantially affects the level of protection” the individual right is afforded, id. at 771, and that therefore, “statutes disqualifying felons from possessing a firearm under any and all circumstances do not offend the Second Amendment,” ibid. Rozier, “by virtue of his felony conviction” could be constitutionally stripped of his Second Amendment right to possess a firearm for self-defense, and the circumstances of such possession were “irrelevant.” Ibid.

Twelve years later, this Court decided New York State Rifle & Pistol Association v. Bruen, 597 U.S. 1 (2022), and held that the Second Amendment protected a right to bear arms outside the home. In so holding, this Court explained that “Heller’s text-and-history standard,” and not means-end scrutiny, was the correct test for determining the constitutionality of gun restrictions. See id. at 39.

The Eleventh Circuit was soon faced with another 922(g)(1) challenge in light of Bruen. See United States v. Dubois, 94 F.4th 1284 (11th Cir. 2024). In Dubois, the defendant appealed the denial of a motion for judgment of acquittal and argued that his 922(g)(1) conviction was unconstitutional in light of Bruen.

The circuit disagreed. Instead, the circuit explained that Bruen did not abrogate Rozier, because “[w]e interpreted Heller as limiting the right to ‘law-abiding and qualified individuals’ and as clearly excluding felons from those categories by referring to felon-in-possession bans as presumptively lawful,” id. at 1293 (quoting Heller, 540 U.S. at 771 & n.6, and “Bruen repeatedly stated that its decision was faithful to Heller,” Dubois, 94 F.4th at 1293. Therefore, the Eleventh Circuit held that Rozier was still good law, and therefore “felons are categorically ‘disqualified’ from exercising their Second Amendment right.” Id. at 1293 (quoting Rozier, 598 F.3d at 770–71).

II. Factual Background

In July 2022, the United States charged Petitioner Lorenzo Garod Pierre with a single count of violating 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(1), for allegedly knowingly possessing a firearm when Pierre had been convicted of a felony.

A few months later, Pierre moved to dismiss the indictment because the indictment was “unconstitutional in light of the Supreme Court’s recent decision in New York State Rifle & Pistol Association, Inc. v. Bruen, 142 S. Ct. 2111 (2022).” Pet. App. 10a. In a lengthy report and recommendation, the magistrate judge held that the Eleventh Circuit’s pre-Bruen decision on the constitutionality of 922(g)(1), Rozier, had been abrogated by Bruen; that Pierre’s possession of a firearm fell within the ambit of the Second Amendment, including that Pierre was part of “the people” protected by the right; but prohibiting all felons from possessing firearms was “consistent with the Nation’s historical tradition of firearm regulation,” Pet. App. 35a (quoting Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2130)). The magistrate judge thus recommended denying the motion to dismiss.

Pierre objected to the report and recommendation. After conducting de novo review, the district court “overrule[d] the R&R and decline[d] to adopt it.” Pet. App. 4a. The district court instead held that Rozier “squarely foreclose[d]” the “constitutional challenge here” and was not convinced that Bruen “overruled or undermined” Rozier. Ibid. Thus, given that “Rozier controls,” the district court denied the motion to dismiss. Id. 5a.

Pierre appealed to the Eleventh Circuit. Pierre argued that his conviction “as applied” violated the Second Amendment. See Dkt. 12 (Pet’r Br.) at 7, United States v. Pierre, 23-11604 (11th Cir. July 19, 2023).

The Eleventh Circuit affirmed in a per curiam decision. Pet. App. 1a-2a. The Eleventh Circuit explained that while Pierre sought to challenge his conviction as “unconstitutional as applied to his case” in light of Bruen, id. 2a, the Eleventh Circuit’s prior published decisions in Dubois and Rozier controlled, and therefore Pierre’s challenge must fail, ibid.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. The Circuits Are Split On The Threshold Question Of Whether As-Applied Challenges to 922(g)(1) Are Cognizable

This appeal asks whether the government may always preclude a person who comes within the orbit of 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(1) from possessing a firearm simply because that person has a predicate felony conviction, or whether the defendant may mount a challenge that his individual circumstances do not supply a basis, consistent with the Second Amendment, for stripping the right.

Post-Bruen, the federal courts of appeals are cleanly split on this important, “pure question of law,” Atkinson v. Garland, 70 F.4th 1018, 1025 (7th Cir.

2023) (Wood, J., dissenting). The Eleventh Circuit forecloses such challenges—saying felons are “categorically ‘disqualified’ from exercising their Second Amendment right,” Dubois, 94 F.4th at 1293 (quoting Rozier, 598 F.3d at 771)—while the Seventh and Ninth Circuit permit defendants to maintain as-applied challenges to charges under 18 U.S.C. 922(g)(1).

The Court should grant plenary review to resolve this split. See Supp. Br. for United States at 3, No. 23-374, Garland v. Range (June 24, 2024) (noting the “circuit conflict has since deepened” on this issue, and citing Dubois and United States v. Duarte, 101 F.4th 657 (9th Cir. 2024) (discussed infra)).

A. The Eleventh Circuit Does Not Allow As-Applied Challenges

The Eleventh Circuit categorically bars defendants from raising as-applied Second Amendment challenges to Section 922(g)(1) convictions—regardless of whether the individual “belongs to a dangerous category or bears individual markers of risk[.]” Kanter v. Barr, 919 F.3d 437, 451 (7th Cir. 2019) (Barrett, J., dissenting).

In the decision below, the Eleventh Circuit noted that Petitioner argued that Section 922(g)(1) “is unconstitutional as applied to his case, in light of New York State Rifle & Pistol Association v. Bruen, 142 S. Ct. 2111 (2022),” Pet. App 1a. But the court of appeals rejected the contention, explaining that its recent decision in Dubois “explicitly rejected this argument.” Pet. App. 2a.

Dubois presented the question of whether the Eleventh Circuit’s prior published case law on the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1), United States v. Rozier, 598 F.3d 768 (11th Cir. 2010), survived Bruen. The court said yes, explaining that Bruen did not “clearly abrogate” Rozier: “Because the Supreme Court made it clear in Heller that [its] holding did not cast doubt on felon-in-possession prohibitions, and because the Court made it clear in Bruen that its holding was in keeping with Heller, Bruen could not have clearly abrogated our precedent upholding section 922(g)(1).” Dubois, 94 F.4th at 1293.

Rozier thus remains the operative rule of decision in the Eleventh Circuit—and it categorically bars all Second Amendment challenges to a Section 922(g)(1) conviction. As the court explained in no uncertain terms, “statutes disqualifying felons from possessing a firearm under any and all circumstances do not offend the Second Amendment,” id. at 771, and the circumstances underlying the possession of the firearm are “irrelevant,” ibid. Thus, as a categorical matter, “statutory restrictions of firearm possession, such as § 922(g)(1), are a constitutional avenue to restrict the Second Amendment right of certain classes of people” and “Rozier, by virtue of his felony conviction, falls within such a class.” Ibid.

Thus, in the Eleventh Circuit, “felons are categorically ‘disqualified’ from exercising their Second Amendment right.” Dubois, 94 F.4th at 1293; compare Kanter v. Barr, 919 F.3d 437, 451 (7th Cir. 2019) (Barrett, J., dissenting) (“Founding-era legislatures did not strip felons of the right to bear arms simply because of their status as felons.”).

This rule of decision continues to apply in the district courts sitting within the Eleventh Circuit, even after United States v. Rahimi, 602 U.S. --, 2024 WL 3074728, at *11 (U.S. June 21, 2024). See, e.g., United States v. Simmons, 2024 WL 3226783, at *1-2 (M.D. Fla. June 28, 2024) (citing Dubois and explaining that Rozier “compels the holding that Section 922(g)(1) is constitutional”). Thus, courts sitting within the Eleventh Circuit are prohibited from assessing the contours of the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1) as-applied to specific individuals. See, e.g., United States v. Beasley, 2023 WL 7839581, at *3 (M.D. Fla. Nov. 16, 2023) (Mizelle, J.) (“Although Rozier remains the law of this Circuit until revisited en banc, there are substantial arguments that Bruen’s methodology applied afresh to § 922(g) might create a distinction between felons convicted of violent versus certain nonviolent crimes.”).

B. The Seventh And Ninth Circuits Consider As-Applied Challenges

In contrast, other Circuits consider—and sustain—as-applied Second Amendment challenges to Section 922(g)(1).

1. The Ninth Circuit’s decision in United States v. Duarte, 101 F.4th 657 (9th Cir. 2024), splits cleanly with Rozier. There, the defendant argued on appeal that his 922(g)(1) conviction was unconstitutional as-applied to him, in light of his “five prior non-violent state criminal convictions” and this Court’s decision in Bruen. Id. at 661–62. The Ninth Circuit agreed.

First, Judge Bea explained that Bruen abrogated the Ninth Circuit’s prior decision in United States v. Vongxay, 594 F.3d 1111 (9th Cir. 2010) (which, like Rozier, categorically precluded as-applied Second Amendment challenges to 922(g)(1)). Id. at 1115.

Second, in considering the as-applied challenge, the court of appeals held that (i) Duarte was part of “the people” protected by the Second Amendment, Duarte, 101 F.4th at 674–75, and, after thoroughly canvassing founding-era law in the American colonies and England on disarmament, held that (ii) “this Nation’s historical tradition of firearm regulation” did not support disarming “non-violent offenders like Duarte” because the court “cannot say that Duarte’s predicate offenses were, by Founding era standards, of a nature serious enough to justify permanently depriving him of his fundamental Second Amendment right,” id. at 676–691.

2. The Seventh Circuit also considers as-applied Second Amendment challenges to 922(g)(1) convictions post-Bruen. In United States v. Gay, 98 F.4th 843 (7th Cir. 2024), the Seventh Circuit assumed “for the sake of argument that there is some room for as-applied challenges,” id. at 846 (emphasis in original), but that Gay’s as-applied challenge must fail, given his history of “22 felonies, including aggravated battery of a peace officer and possessing a weapon while in prison,” id. at 847. In rendering its decision, Judge Easterbrook, writing for the court, noted the split among the courts of appeals and that “[t]he Justices have yet to consider the question whether non-violent offenders may wage as-applied challenges to § 922(g)(1),” id. at 846.

* * *

In seeking certiorari in Garland v. Range (No. 23-374), the United States argued that “[a] person may not obtain an as-applied exemption from Section 922(g)(1) based on the nature of his crime or his individual circumstances,” because “Congress may disarm individuals who have been convicted of crimes that satisfy the common definition of a felony.” Pet. for Writ of Certiorari at 19-22 (Oct. 5, 2023). This substantive position advanced by the United States—which would disarm all individuals based on status alone—has no analogous principle in the relevant historical record and is starkly wrong, see infra Part II.

Even so, Petitioner agrees with the United States that this fundamental legal question continues to divide the Circuits, and that this Court’s decision in Rahimi—which concerned a facial challenge to Section 922(g)(8)—does not resolve the split; rather, “the present conflict is unlikely to resolve itself without further intervention by this Court.” Supp. Br. for the United States, Garland v. Range, supra at 5.

The Eighth and Tenth Circuits categorically barred as-applied Second Amendment challenges to Section 922(g)(1). See United States v. Jackson, 69

F.4th 495 (8th Cir. 2023); Vincent v. Garland, 80 F.4th 1197, 1200–02 (10th Cir. 2023). Although this court granted certiorari, vacated those decisions, and remanded in light of Rahimi,¹ the Tenth Circuit recently confirmed that Rahimi did not “indisputably and pellucidly abrogate Vincent,” United States v. Curry, 2024 WL 3219693, at *4 n.7 (10th Cir. June 28, 2024), its post-Bruen precedent that “upheld the constitutionality of the federal ban for any convicted felon’s possession of a firearm,” Vincent, 80 F.4th at 1202 (emphasis in original).

In any event, the split will persist. Either those Circuits will adhere to their prior precedent, joining the Eleventh Circuit and deepening the divide, or they will change course, therefore leaving the Eleventh Circuit as the only Circuit in the country that forecloses as-applied Second Amendment challenges to 922(g)(1).

II. Disarmament Based On Status Alone Is Plainly Wrong

The Eleventh Circuit’s rule of decision that “felons are categorically ‘disqualified’ from exercising their Second Amendment right,” Dubois, 94 F.4th at 1293 (quoting Rozier, 598 F.3d at 770–71), is without historical or textual support.

1. “[A] law regulat[ing] arms-bearing . . . may not be compatible with the right if it does so to an extent beyond what was done at the founding.” Rahimi, 2024 WL 3074728, at *6. Yet “[t]he Founding generation had no laws ... denying the right [to keep and bear arms] to people convicted of crimes.” Binderup v. Att’y Gen. United States of Am., 836 F.3d 336, 368 (3d Cir. 2016) (Hardiman, J., concurring); Kanter, 919 F.3d at 454 (Barrett, J., dissenting) (“The best historical support for a legislative power to permanently dispossess all felons would be founding-era laws explicitly imposing—or explicitly authorizing the legislature to impose—such a ban. But at least thus far, scholars have not been able to identify any such laws.”).

2. To be sure, “[t]he law must comport with the principles underlying the Second Amendment, but it need not be a ‘dead ringer’ or a ‘historical twin.’” Rahimi, 2024 WL 3074728, at *6 (quoting Bruen, 597 U.S. at 30). But at the founding, the principles animating disarmament of criminals focused on “dangerousness” or a proclivity to violence—not status alone. Kanter, 919 F.3d at 451 (Barrett, J., dissenting) (“In 1791—and for well more than a century afterward—legislatures disqualified categories of people from the right to bear arms only when they judged that doing so was necessary to protect the public safety.”). Rather, the only founding-era evidence “remotely close lies in proposals made in the New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania,” but “common to all three is not about felons in particular or even criminals in general; it is about threatened violence and the risk of public injury.” Id. at 454–56.

Instead of status, “[t]he historical touchstone is danger.” Folajtar v. Att’y Gen. of the United States, 980 F.3d 897, 912 (3d Cir. 2020) (Bibas, J., dissenting). “Consider Catholics, who had long been persecuted for their perceived lack of virtue. They did not suddenly lose their guns because society viewed them as unvirtuous. Rather, the tipping point was an ‘actual war’ with a Catholic nation, which created a risk that Catholics would sympathize with the French, our enemy, and engage in rebellion or insurrection.” United States v. Jackson, 85 F.4th 468, 473 (8th Cir. 2023) (Stras, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (cleaned up); see also Rahimi, 2024 WL 3074728, at *9 (referencing “surety and going armed laws, which involved judicial determinations of whether a particular defendant likely would threaten or had threatened another with a weapon”).

“In sum, founding-era legislatures categorically disarmed groups whom they judged to be a threat to the public safety. But neither the convention proposals nor historical practice supports a legislative power to categorically disarm felons because of their status as felons.” Kanter, 919 F.3d at 458 (Barrett, J., dissenting).

3. Permanently barring felons from exercising their Second Amendment rights, without any individualized finding of dangerousness, differs from the treatment accorded other, analogous individual rights. While felons could historically be denied the franchise or the right to serve on juries, “[t]he problem with this argument is that virtue exclusions are associated with civic rights—individual rights that ‘require[] citizens to act in a collective manner for distinctly public purposes.’” Kanter, 919 F.3d at 462 (Barrett, J., dissenting) (quoting Saul Cornell, A New Paradigm for the Second Amendment, 22 Law & Hist. Rev. 161, 165 (2004)). And “the Second Amendment confer[s] an individual right to keep and bear arms,” Heller, 554 U.S. at 595, not a civic right, see Binderup, 836 F.3d at 371 (Hardiman, J., concurring) (“[T]his virtuous-citizens-only conception of the right to keep and bear arms is closely associated with pre-Heller interpretations of the Second Amendment by proponents of the ‘sophisticated collective rights model’ who rejected the view that the Amendment confers an individual right and instead characterized the right as a ‘civic right[.]’”). Indeed, “we would never say” that “because the state used to execute felons, it may now permanently strip them of their freedom of speech or religion.” Folajtar, 980 F.3d at 921 (Bibas, J., dissenting).

4. Nor is the government’s specter of “felony-by-felony” litigation worth its salt. Pet. for Writ of Certiorari at 22, No. 23-374, Garland v. Range (Oct. 5, 2023). “[F]elony-by-felony’ litigation is nothing to fear.” Jackson, 85 F.4th 468, 478 (Stras, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc). Before Bruen, the Third Circuit explained that a successful as-applied challenge to a 922(g)(1) conviction required the defendant to “present facts about himself and his background that distinguish his circumstances from those of persons historically barred from Second Amendment protections.” United States v. Barton, 633 F.3d 168, 174 (3d Cir. 2011). “Substitute the word ‘dangerousness’ and shift the burden of proof to the government, and Barton provides the template for what an as-applied challenge looks like post-Bruen.” Jackson, 85 F.4th at 478 (Stras, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc).

III. The Issue Is Exceptionally Important

The pure legal question of whether as-applied challenges may be lodged against Section 922(g)(1) is a critical one.

Section 922(g) “is no minor provision.” Rehaif v. United States, 588 U.S. 225, 239 (2019) (Alito, J., dissenting). It accounts for almost 12.5% of all federal criminal convictions. See U.S. Sent. Comm’n, Quick Facts: 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) Firearms Offenses (July 2024).² And of the section’s nine subdivisions, Section 922(g)(1) is its aorta—around 88.5% of all Section 922(g) convictions in fiscal year 2023 were obtained under 922(g)(1). Ibid. At the same time, “[t]he most recent available annual data show that only 18.2 percent of felony convictions in state courts and 3.7 percent of federal felony convictions were for ‘violent offenses.’” United States v. Jackson, 69 F.4th 495, 502 n.2 (8th Cir. 2023), cert. granted, judgment vacated, No. 23-6170, 2024 WL 3259675 (U.S. July 2, 2024).

Moreover, although the right to keep and bear arms is among the “fundamental rights necessary to our system of ordered liberty,” McDonald v. Chicago, 561 U.S. 742, 778 (2010), felony convictions are “the leading reason” for background checks to result in the denial of this individual right, and over two million denials have taken place since the creation of the federal background-check system in 1998. See Crim. Justice Info. Servs. Div., Fed. Bureau of Investigation, U.S. Dep’t of Justice, National Instant Criminal Background Check System Operational Report 2020-2021, at 18 (Apr. 2022).

Whether permanently disarming felons categorically is appropriate, or whether the Second Amendment permits as-applied challenges to 922(g)(1) convictions, is therefore exceptionally important. Accordingly, as the United States explained, “[p]ostponing review of the question presented would prolong the disruption” occasioned by this conflict among the courts of appeals as to this important section of the federal criminal law. Supp. Br. for United States, Garland v. Range, supra, at 6. This uncertainty is reflected in the disparate outcomes in federal district courts across the country on this question. See id. at nn. 1 & 2 (collecting cases). And “the substantial costs of prolonging uncertainty about the statute’s constitutionality outweigh any benefits of further percolation.” Id. at 3.

IV. This Case Presents An Ideal Vehicle

This appeal presents the ideal vehicle for assessing this legal question, because the decisions below in no way turned on the nature of Petitioner’s past felony convictions—indeed, the decisions below make no mention of Pierre’s criminal history. See generally Pet. App. Thus, the only issue presented by this appeal is a narrow one: whether an as-applied Second Amendment challenge to a 922(g)(1) conviction is cognizable at all, or whether 922(g)(1) is categorically constitutional because the mere status of being a felon (whatever the felony or individual circumstance) permits disarmament. See Jackson, 85 F.4th at 469 (Stras, J., dissenting from denial of rehearing en banc) (“By cutting off as-applied challenges” to 922(g)(1), the courts “create a group of second-class citizens: felons who, for the rest of their lives, cannot touch a firearm, no matter the crime they committed or how long ago it happened.”).

This circumscribed legal question separates the instant petition from the petitions raising the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1) that this Court recently granted, vacated, and remanded.³ In those petitions, the United States asked this Court to grant review so that the Court could “consider” the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1) “across a range of circumstances.” See Supp. Br. for United States, Garland v. Range, supra, at 6. This Court declined to do so.

The Court was right to deny plenary review as suggested by the United States in those petitions. Contrary to the United States’ suggestion, the better course—and the one presented by this petition—is not to grant certiorari on various petitions and apply the law to the facts of each of those appeals in the first instance, but to decide the narrow question of whether 922(g)(1) is subject to as-applied Second Amendment challenges, and then to let the lower courts apply any new test that this Court sets forth in the first instance. See, e.g., Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 159 (1999) (Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (“Part III answers the quite different question whether the trial judge abused his discretion . . . a proper answer to that question requires a study of the record that can be performed more efficiently by the Court of Appeals than by the nine Members of this Court[.]”). Any splits resulting from the lower courts’ application of as-applied challenges—such as how to assess whether the individual “belongs to a dangerous category or bears individual markers of risk,” Kanter, 919 F.3d at 451 (Barrett, J., dissenting)—can be addressed by this Court later, if and when splits arise.

Finally, the issue in this Petition was presented by way of a motion-to-dismiss the Indictment, so the legal issue is preserved, and there is no need to engage in a plain-error review, unlike other petitions that may come to the Court on this issue. Compare Duarte, 101 F.4th at 663 (as-applied challenge not preserved and therefore potentially subject to plain-error review).

V. Alternatively, This Court Should Grant, Vacate, And Remand In Light Of Rahimi

The Court should grant certiorari on the Question Presented. Granting, vacating, and remanding the petition in light of Rahimi would delay ultimate resolution on an issue the courts remain split on, supra Part I. In the interim, countless individuals seeking to vindicate a constitutional right “no less protected by our Constitution than other rights enumerated in that document,” Jackson v. City & Cnty. of San Francisco, 576 U.S. 1013, (2015) (Thomas, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) will be subject to disparate outcomes depending on the jurisdiction they reside in, supra Part III. See Lawrence v. Chater, 516 U.S. 163, 168 (1996) (per curiam) (“[A] GVR order is inappropriate” if “the delay and further cost entailed in a remand are not justified by the potential benefits of further consideration by the lower court.”).

If the Court does not grant plenary review of the petition, in the alternative, this Court should grant the petition, vacate the judgment below, and remand for consideration in light of Rahimi. The Eleventh Circuit’s categorical bar on as-applied challenges to Section 922(g)(1) on the basis that mere status as a felon permits disarmament cannot square with this Court’s “reject[ion] [of] the Government’s contention that Rahimi may be disarmed simply because he is not ‘responsible.’” Rahimi, 602 U.S. --, 2024 WL 3074728, at *11. For this reason and for the reasons explained above, supra Part II, as well as in light of the Court’s granting, vacating and remanding of petitions raising a similar issue, supra n.1, this Court should, in the alternative, grant, vacate, and remand here as well.

CONCLUSION

For all these reasons, this Court should grant the petition for certiorari, or alternatively, grant the petition, vacate the judgment below, and remand for consideration in light of Rahimi.

No. 23-11604

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff-Appellee,

versus

LORENZO GAROD PIERRE,

Defendant-Appellant.

March 12, 2024, Filed

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida.
D.C. Docket No. 1:22-cr-20321-JEM-1

Before NEWSOM, ABUDU, and ANDERSON, Circuit
Judges.

PER CURIAM:

Lorenzo Pierre appeals his conviction for possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1), arguing that § 922(g)(1) is unconstitutional as applied to his case, in light of New York State Rifle & Pistol Association v. Bruen, 597 U.S. 1, 142 S. Ct. 2111, 213 L. Ed. 2d 387 (2022), because it violates the Second Amendment and is inconsistent with this nation’s tradition of firearms regulations.

In United States v. DuBois, No. 22-10829, manuscript op. at 9-15 (11th Cir. 2024), we explicitly rejected this argument and ruled that our prior precedent in United States v. Rozier, 598 F.3d 768 (11th Cir. 2010), in which we upheld the constitutionality of § 922(g)(1), remains good law. See Smith v. GTE Corp., 236 F.3d 1292, 1300 n.8 (11th Cir. 2001) (“Under the well-established prior panel precedent rule of this Circuit, the holding of the first panel to address an issue is the law of this Circuit, thereby binding all subsequent panels unless and until the first panel’s holding is overruled by the Court sitting en banc or by the Supreme Court.” (citing Cargill v. Turpin, 120 F.3d 1366, 1386 (11th Cir. 1997))). As such, Pierre’s argument fails, and his conviction is AFFIRMED.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

[2](Court called to order)

Appendix B

COURTROOM DEPUTY: Calling case 22-criminal-20321, United States of America versus Lorenzo Garod Pierre.

Counsel, announce your names for the record, starting with the Government.

MR. THOMPSON: Good morning, Your Honor. Jeremy Thompson on behalf of the United States. To my left I have AUSA Jonathan Coven.

THE COURT: Good morning, gentlemen.

MR. FEIGENBAUM: Good morning, Your Honor. Marty Feigenbaum on behalf of Lorenzo Pierre. He is before the Court.

THE COURT: All right. You may be seated.

Okay. There's two matters I want to address before. First, the Defendant's motion to dismiss. After careful consideration of Judge Becerra's report and recommendation on the Defendant's motion to dismiss, and after conducting the de novo review, I overrule the R&R and decline to adopt it.

In United States versus Rozier, the Eleventh Circuit upheld the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1) and concluded that convicted felons are not protected by the right to keep and bear arms. Rozier squarely forecloses the Defendant's constitutional challenge here. The Court does not find the US Supreme Court's recent decision in Bruen overruled or undermined Rozier to the point of abrogation. Therefore, Rozier controls and the Court denies the Defendant's motion to dismiss.

[3]Next, I want to address my order on Mr. Feigenbaum's motion to withdraw. Mr. Feigenbaum, have you discussed with your client my order denying your motion to withdraw and to appoint new counsel?

MR. FEIGENBAUM: Yes, I was able to, yes, Your Honor, this morning for about an hour and a half. I came early and was able to meet with Mr. Pierre in the Marshal's lock-up.

THE COURT: All right. Does the Defendant wish to proceed pro se, or will you be representing him for the change of plea?

MR. FEIGENBAUM: I could not reach a conclusion about what he wants to do after speaking with him.

THE COURT: All right. Mr. Garod Pierre, if you want to proceed pro se I'll schedule a hearing to provide you with the necessary information to make a knowing waiver. If you do not want to proceed pro se, then we'll proceed with the hearing on the change of plea at this time. Your call. What do you want to do?

THE DEFENDANT: At this moment, Your Honor, I really don't know.

THE COURT: If you don't know, we sure don't. It's your call. If you want to change your plea, I'm not going to permit you to change your lawyer. If you want to go by yourself, you're welcome to do so. I think it's a mistake, but that's your call, not mine. It's not the prosecutor's call either. Whichever way [4]you want to go. But it's going to happen soon, so you'll have to make up your mind, whatever you want to do. We'll either go to trial or we'll go forward, but I'm not changing lawyers.

I've explained, and I believe that Mr. Feigenbaum would have explained to you that you're entitled to an attorney, but if you can afford an attorney, you can hire Clarence Darrow if he was alive. You can hire anybody you want. But if you can't, then you're going to take a competent lawyer. You've already fired the Public Defender's Office which, frankly, is as good a lawyer as there is in the area. Mr. Feigenbaum is an attorney on our Criminal Justice Act list and I assure you we deal with the Criminal Justice Act list on a regular basis. There's some turn over on it. If a person does not do a good job representing people, we get rid of them. Mr. Feigenbaum has been on the list for a while. He is a competent lawyer and I'm sure that he is doing his best to represent you. Just because you don't like his advice doesn't mean you're entitled to fire him and get another lawyer. He is responsible for representing you, but he is also responsible for the canons of ethics and the rules that govern lawyers. He's not going to lose his license by representing you, and therefore sometimes he has to tell you you can't do what you want to do. I don't know because I haven't gotten into the details of what your disagreement is with him and I don't want to. That's between you and your lawyer. But sometimes he just can't do what you want him to do.

Appendix B

[5]At this point Mr. Feigenbaum is your lawyer and if you want him, that's great. If you want to do it yourself, that's your call. We'll set this case for trial at the -- was there a date that was already set for trial? Gentlemen?

MR. THOMPSON: Your Honor, the 27th.

THE COURT: 27th of February?

MR. THOMPSON: Yes, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay. That's when we'll go to trial. You can either go with Mr. Feigenbaum or you can go by yourself. Doesn't make any difference to me but I can tell you right now you are affecting your acceptance of responsibility if you go to trial, or frankly if you waited much longer to tell me that you're going to be pleading guilty. I really don't have all day to sit here and discuss this with you. I think that Mr. Feigenbaum has, I am sure, explained the options to you. He understands the options. You can go on your own, you can use him, you can plead guilty if you wish to, or you can go to trial. I don't care. I'm here all day every day anyway. And the 27th is next week. I don't know what other cases -- but we'll have a calendar call this afternoon, I believe, and we'll let you know. It will be -- whatever it is it is.

THE DEFENDANT: At this point he can remain the attorney. I still need time to, you know, go over some things. I just can't rush into a plea that I don't know what I'm getting myself into, you know, and I still believe that I ain't have a [6]fair chance, you know, to --

Appendix B

THE COURT: Okay. We can go to trial. I don't care. Doesn't make any difference to me. I presume the Government's ready to go?

THE DEFENDANT: It's not about the trial, Your Honor. It's about, you know, my family-wise, what they going to do and like --

THE COURT: You know, it's a relatively simple case. Felon in possession. They prove up that you're a felon and somebody comes in and says that you were in possession. Now, the jury may not believe them and that's fine. You can go on a defense and you can nitpick and pick at them, sometimes you win. I don't remember a felon in possession case being lost by the Government, but I expect that there are some that they have and that's your call. I don't care. It doesn't make any difference to me at all. As I said, I'm here all day every day. I'll be happy to take this case to trial. I think you're probably Number 1 on the list for trial for next week, so that's when we're going.

The Government ready?

MR. THOMPSON: Yes, Your Honor. And also, last night I spoke to defense counsel about potentially having our office seal the plea agreement if that was one of the concerns that the Defendant had. My office just approved that this morning, Your Honor, and we're willing to file a motion to seal the plea

CASE NO.: 1:22-cr-20321-JEM/Becerra

LORENZO GAROD PIERRE,

Defendant.

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION ON DEFENDANT’S MOTION TO DISMISS INDICTMENT UNDER SECOND AMENDMENT¹

THIS CAUSE came before the Court on Defendant, Lorenzo Pierre’s (“Pierre” or “Defendant”), Motion to Dismiss Indictment Under Second Amendment (the “Motion”). ECF No. [16]. The Government filed a Response, ECF No. [23], and Defendant filed a Reply, ECF No. [27]. The Court permitted the Parties to submit additional briefing, and the Government filed its Sur-Reply, ECF No. [39], and Defendant submitted his Response to the Sur-Reply (the “Supplemental Response”), ECF No.

1. The Honorable Jose E. Martinez, United States District Judge, referred this matter to the undersigned. ECF No. [18].

[44]. The Court also held oral argument on the Motion (the “Hearing”). ECF No. [45]. After the Hearing, the Government filed a Notice of Supplemental Authority, citing a recent Third Circuit Court of Appeals case affirming the constitutionality of Title 18, United States Code, Section 922(g)(1), the same issue raised in the Motion: Range v. Attorney General United States of America, No. 21-2835, 2022 WL 16955670, at *1 (3d Cir. Nov. 16, 2022). ECF No. [49].

Defendant filed a Response to the Government’s Notice of Supplemental Authority. ECF No. [52]. Upon due consideration of the Motion, the pertinent portions of the record, and being otherwise fully advised in the premises, it is hereby RECOMMENDED that Defendant’s Motion be DENIED.

I. PROCEDURAL AND LEGAL BACKGROUND

Defendant is charged in a one-count Indictment with “knowingly possess[ing] a firearm and ammunition in and affecting interstate and foreign commerce, knowing that he had previously been convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year, in violation of Title 18, United States Code, Section 922(g)(1)[.]” ECF No. [3]. The Indictment also includes a forfeiture count. Id. Defendant brings the instant Motion seeking dismissal of the Indictment, arguing that 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(1) is unconstitutional in light of the Supreme Court’s recent decision in New York State Rifle & Pistol Association, Inc. v. Bruen, 142 S. Ct. 2111 (2022). See ECF No. [16]; see also ECF Nos. [27], [44]. Because the adjudication of this Motion is rooted in the Supreme Court’s recent decision in Bruen, as well as its decision in District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570 (2008), and the Eleventh Circuit’s decision in United States v. Rozier, 598 F.3d 768 (11th Cir. 2010), we begin first with a short review of those decisions.

Appendix C

In Heller, the Supreme Court undertook its “first in-depth examination of the Second Amendment.” Heller, 554 U.S. at 635. At issue was the constitutionality of the District of Columbia’s (“D.C.”) ban on the possession of handguns in the home. Id. at 573. The respondent in Heller was a D.C. law enforcement officer who was permitted to carry a handgun while on duty but was not permitted to register or keep a handgun in his D.C. home. Id. at 575–76. The Supreme Court held, “on the basis of both text and history, that the Second Amendment conferred an individual right to keep and bear arms.” Id. at 595. In so holding, the Supreme Court first analyzed the plain language of the text of the Second Amendment. See id. at 576–600. In finding that the Second Amendment secures an individual right to bear arms for self-defense, and not just for use in a militia, the Court considered that “the inherent right of self-defense has been central to the Second Amendment right.” Id. at 628.

The Court proceeded to look at “the historical background of the Second Amendment . . . because it has always been widely understood that the Second Amendment, like the First and Fourth Amendments, codified a pre-existing right”, and proceeded to review the Second Amendment’s historical roots. Id. at 592. The Court found that the right to possess a firearm for self-defense in the home “is confirmed by analogous arms-bearing rights in state constitutions that preceded and immediately followed adoption of the Second Amendment.” See id. at 600–01. In doing so, the Court looked to “a variety of legal and other sources[,]” including post-ratification commentary, pre-Civil War case law, post-Civil War legislation, and post-Civil War commentary in order “to determine the public understanding of [the] legal text in the period after its . . . ratification.” Id. at 605–19 (emphasis in original). The Court’s historical review found that “virtually all interpreters of the Second Amendment in the century after its enactment interpreted the Amendment” consistently with how the Court interpreted it in Heller. Id. at 605. Specifically, based on its textual and historical analysis, the Court concluded that the District of Columbia’s ban on the possession of handguns in the home violated the Second Amendment. Id. at 635. The Supreme Court cautioned, however, that “the right secured by the Second Amendment is not unlimited” and while the Court did not “undertake an exhaustive historical analysis . . . of the full scope of the Second Amendment, nothing in [the Heller] opinion should be taken to cast doubt on longstanding prohibitions on the possession of firearms by felons. . . .” Id. at 626.

In the years following Heller, federal district and circuit courts around the country began to consider gun regulations using the framework laid out by Justice Scalia in the Heller majority opinion. However, as discussed below, some courts also added a means-ends approach in weighing whether the disputed gun regulation was constitutional, under which “[a]t the first step, the government may justify its regulation by “establish[ing] that the challenged law regulates activity falling outside the scope of the right as originally understood” and at the second step, the courts would analyze “how close the law comes to the core of the Second Amendment right and the severity of the law’s burden on that right.” Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2126. Relevant to the issue at hand is the Eleventh Circuit’s post-Heller decision in Rozier, where the Court considered the very issue raised in this Motion: the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1). See Rozier, 598 F.3d at 769. In Rozier, the defendant had previously been convicted of felony drug charges at the time that he became involved in a domestic dispute where he “pull[ed] out a handgun[,]” leading to his indictment and conviction for possession of a firearm and ammunition by a convicted felon, in violation of Section 922(g)(1). Id. at 769–70. Rozier challenged his conviction by arguing that Section 922(g)(1) violated his Second Amendment rights, because, like the defendant in Heller, Rozier possessed the handgun “in the home and for the purposes of self-defense.” Id. at 770.

The Eleventh Circuit held that, even taking as true Rozier’s assertion that he possessed the handgun for self-defense, the Court must first “determine whether he is qualified to possess a handgun.” Id. at 770–71. The Eleventh Circuit reasoned that “Rozier’s Second Amendment right to bear arms is not weighed in the same manner as that of a law-abiding citizen, such as the appellant in Heller.” Id. at 771. In support of its reasoning, the Court cited to the Supreme Court’s reference to individuals “disqualified from the exercise of Second Amendment rights” and to the assertion that “nothing in our opinion should be taken to cast doubt on longstanding prohibitions on the possession of firearms by felons. . . .” Id. (quoting Heller, 554 U.S. at 626, 635). The Eleventh Circuit read this language to “suggest[] that statutes disqualifying felons from possessing a firearm under any and all circumstances do not offend the Second Amendment.” Id. Thus, the Eleventh Circuit found that Section 922(g)(1) was a “constitutional avenue to restrict the Second Amendment right of certain classes of people[,]” such as felons, regardless of whether they possessed the handgun for self-defense. Id.

This year, in Bruen, the Supreme Court addressed the constitutionality of New York’s firearm licensing statute (the “New York Law”), which “condition[ed] issuance of a license to carry [a handgun] on a citizen’s showing of some additional special need” beyond general self-defense. Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2122. The Supreme Court held that the Second Amendment protected “an individual’s right to carry a handgun for self-defense outside the home” and found New York’s law unconstitutional in that it required this additional showing of special need. Id. In so holding, the Supreme Court clarified the standard set forth in Heller and rejected the reasoning of Courts of Appeals that, after Heller, had adopted a two-step test combining history with means-end scrutiny. See id. at 2129–30, 2134. The Court “made the constitutional standard endorsed in Heller more explicit,” and specifically directed courts to assess whether modern firearms regulations are consistent with the Second Amendment’s text and historical understanding. Id. at 2126, 2134. Specifically, and unequivocally, the Court:

reiterate[d] that the standard for applying the Second Amendment is as follows: When the Second Amendment’s plain text covers an individual’s conduct, the Constitution presumptively protects that conduct. The government must then justify its regulation by demonstrating that it is consistent with the Nation’s historical tradition of firearm regulation. Only then may a court conclude that the individual’s conduct falls outside the Second Amendment’s “unqualified command.”

Id. at 2129–30 (citation omitted). The Supreme Court acknowledged that the “historical inquiry that courts must conduct will often involve reasoning by analogy” and that “determining whether a historical regulation is a proper analogue for a distinctly modern firearm regulation requires a determination of whether the two regulations are ‘relevantly similar.’” Id. at 2132 (citation omitted).

In striking down the New York Law, the Court first turned to the text of the Second Amendment. Id. at 2134. The Court reasoned that the petitioners in the case were “ordinary, law-abiding, adult citizens” who “are part of ‘the people’ whom the Second Amendment protects” and that handguns are indisputably “weapons ‘in common use’ today for self-defense.” Id. Accordingly, the Court found that the conduct at issue, publicly carrying handguns for self-defense, is protected by the plain text of the Second Amendment, as “[n]othing in the Second Amendment’s text draws a home/public distinction with respect to the right to keep and bear arms.” Id. Moreover, the Court concluded that the “definition of ‘bear’ naturally encompasses public carry” since “[m]ost gun owners. . . do not ‘bear’ (i.e., carry) [firearms] in the home beyond moments of actual confrontation.” Id.

The Supreme Court then turned to the issue of whether the respondents could show that New York’s regulation was “consistent with this Nation’s historical tradition of firearm regulation.” Id. at 2135. The Court noted that respondents cited to a range of “historical sources from the late 1200s to the early 1900s[,]” including: “(1) medieval to early modern England; (2) the American Colonies and the early Republic; (3) antebellum America; (4) Reconstruction; and (5) the late-19th and early-20th centuries.” Id. at 2135–36. The Court noted that “not all history is created equal” and historical sources from the time of the Second Amendment’s ratification are most relevant because “Constitutional rights are enshrined with the scope they were understood to have when the people adopted them.” Id. at 2136 (emphasis in original) (quoting Heller, 554 U.S. at 634–35). In weighing the historical record, the Court first cited to the 1328 Statute of Northampton, for which the respondents “argue[d] that the prohibition on ‘rid[ing]’ or ‘go[ing] . . . armed’ was a sweeping restriction on public carry of self-defense weapons that would ultimately be adopted in Colonial America[.]” Id. at 2139. The Court found that the law “has little bearing on the Second Amendment adopted in 1791” as it “was enacted . . . more than 450 years before the ratification of the Constitution” and the statute “obviously did not contemplate handguns, given they did not appear in Europe until about the mid-1500s.” Id. at 2139–40.

Appendix C

Second, the Court noted that “the respondents point to only three restrictions on public carry[,]” which the Court doubted “could suffice to show a tradition of public-carry regulation.” Id. at 2142. Instead, the Court found that “[f]ar from banning the carrying of any class of firearms, [the cited regulations] merely codified the existing common-law offense of bearing arms to terrorize the people[.]” Id. at 2143. Although respondents cited to one 1686 East New Jersey law restricting farmers or plantation owners from “concealed carry of ‘pocket pistol[s]’ or other ‘unusual or unlawful weapons,’” the Court found that this single law did not carry much weight in the analysis because the law did not prohibit guns for self-defense. Id. at 2143–44. The Court also found that three late-18th-century and early-19th-century statutes were not persuasive because they “parallel[ed] the colonial statutes already discussed[.]” Id. at 2144.

Next, the Court considered respondents’ citation to public-carry restrictions that arose after the Second Amendment was ratified—specifically, common-law offenses, statutory prohibitions, and “surety” statutes. Id. at 2145. The Court found that “[n]one of these restrictions imposed a substantial burden on public carry analogous to the burden created by New York’s restrictive licensing regime.” Id. Additionally, the Court noted that sources around the time that the Fourteenth Amendment was adopted similarly did not support a finding that New York’s law was consistent with historical tradition. See id. at 2150–53.

Appendix C

Finally, as to the “slight uptick in gun regulation during the late-19th century—principally in the Western Territories[,]” the Court found that such sources were not persuasive because not only were they not temporally close to ratification, but the regulations were also inconsistent with the “overwhelming evidence of an otherwise enduring American tradition permitting public carry.” Id. at 2153–54. Ultimately, “[a]t the end of [a] long journey through the Anglo-American history of public carry, [the Court] conclude[d] that respondents [did] not me[et] their burden to identify an American tradition justifying” New York’s special need requirement because “[a]part from a few late-19th-century outlier jurisdictions, American governments simply have not broadly prohibited the public carry of commonly used firearms for personal defense.” Id. at 2156. The Court concluded that although the historical record supported some restrictions around the “intent for which one could carry arms, the manner by which one carried arms, or the exceptional circumstances under which one could not carry arms[,]” there was insufficient support for a broad prohibition like that which the New York regulation imposed. Id.

“[A]s other districts have recognized, ‘Bruen transformed and left uncharted much of the legal landscape.’” United States v. Price, No. 22-cr-00097, 2022 WL 6968457, at *2 (S.D.W. Va. Oct. 12, 2022) (quoting United States v. Charles, No. 22-cr-00154, 2022 WL 4913900, at *1 (W.D. Tex. Oct. 3, 2022)). “[T]he critical question lower courts now face is whether Bruen requires the regulatory landscape be trimmed with a scalpel or a chainsaw . . . how strict—or loose—an interpretation Bruen requires hasn't been clarified, leaving important questions." United States v. Perez-Gallan, No. 22-cr-00427, 2022 WL 16858516, at *13 (W.D. Tex. Nov. 10, 2022). Indeed, as district courts around the country begin to grapple with Bruen and the standard that it requires the government to meet in defending its gun regulations, there appears to be no district court in this Circuit that has yet issued a written decision on Bruen's application to Section 922(g)(1). As for circuit courts, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals is the only one that has squarely addressed Bruen's application to Section 922(g)(1), finding the prohibition of felons from possessing firearms constitutionally permissible. Range, 2022 WL 16955670, at *1.

II. THE INSTANT MOTION

Defendant contends that given Bruen's analysis, "rooted in the Second Amendment's text, as informed by history[,]" the Court must find that Section 922(g)(1) is unconstitutional. ECF No. [16] at 5. Defendant contends that "the Second Amendment's plain text covers [the defendant's] conduct" because: (1) he is among "the people" protected under the Second Amendment, as he is a United States citizen and the Second Amendment "does not draw a felon/non-felon distinction"; (2) the right to "keep" and "bear" refers to the right to possess, at home and in public; and (3) "arms" includes a handgun and ammunition. See id. at 5–10. Moreover, Defendant argues that Eleventh Circuit authority, including Rozier and United States v. Jimenez-Shilon, 34 F.4th 1042 (11th Cir. 2022), supports a finding that felons are among "the people" protected by the Second Amendment. See ECF No. [27] at 16–18.

Defendant contends that because he is indisputably part of “the people,” the Government bears the burden to show that Section 922(g)(1) is “consistent with the Nation’s historical tradition of firearm regulation.” ECF No. [16] at 9–10 (quoting Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2126). Defendant argues that the Government cannot meet its burden because Section 922(g)(1) is inconsistent with that historical tradition. Id. at 10. Specifically, Defendant argues that under Bruen, the Court may only look to “distinctly similar” historical regulations, rather than analogous regulations, because the “general societal problem” here—the possession of guns by felons—is longstanding, as opposed to a newer concern unimaginable at the time of the country’s founding. See id. Additionally, Defendant argues that it is the Government’s burden to demonstrate that history of regulation, dating from the time the Second Amendment was ratified, and that courts are not to undertake their own analysis. See id. at 11–12, 14. According to Defendant, there is no evidence of “distinctly similar regulation” to Section 922(g)(1)’s felon firearm prohibition at the time of the Second Amendment’s ratification, and as such, the Government cannot meet its burden. Id. at 18.

The Government responds that notwithstanding Bruen, the decisions in Heller and Rozier dictate that Defendant’s Motion should be denied. See ECF Nos. [23], [39]. Specifically, the Government argues that Heller “expressly constrained the constitutional right [to bear arms] so as not to upset certain longstanding prohibitions on either the manner of possessing and selling firearms or the classes of persons who could do so, such as convicted felons like the Defendant.” ECF No. [23] at 2 (citing Heller, 554 U.S. at 626). The Government contends that the Supreme Court’s language in Heller that “[n]othing in our opinion should be taken to cast doubt on longstanding prohibitions on the possession of firearms by felons” resolves the “threshold question” of Bruen, namely “whether ‘the Second Amendment’s plain text covers an individual’s conduct.’” ECF No. [39] at 1–2 (citations omitted) (emphasis omitted).

Second, the Government argues that the Eleventh Circuit’s decision in Rozier, which held that felons were not “qualified to possess a firearm” because they “categorically were a ‘certain class[] of people’ whose firearm possession was not protected,” is still binding precedent and is controlling. Id. at 2 (quoting Rozier, 598 F.3d at 770–71) (emphasis removed). According to the Government, Bruen “merely extend[ed] the logic” of Heller, ECF No. [23] at 3, and neither overruled nor “undermined . . . to the point of abrogation” Rozier because “the only ‘people’ Bruen held were protected by the Second Amendment were ‘law-abiding citizens.’” ECF No. [39] at 2–3. Moreover, the Government argues that the Eleventh Circuit did not apply the means-end test that was specifically rejected in Bruen, such that Bruen “in no way undermines Rozier.” Id. at 3. In short, the Government contends that “Bruen simply has no bearing on the case against the Defendant, and therefore, this Court need not address the two-step analysis outlined therein, on which the Defendant places such heavy reliance.” ECF No. [23] at 4.

Appendix C

Moreover, the Government argues that even if Bruen's standard applies, Section 922(g)(1)'s prohibition on felons possessing firearms is consistent with our historical tradition. See ECF No. [39] at 4–7. In support of its argument, the Government cites to various sister circuit cases that have indicated that limitations on felons' civic rights, as well as the right to bear arms, have existed throughout history. See id. The Government also cites to treatises that support its argument that “[s]ome classes of people were ‘almost universally excluded’ from exercising certain civic rights, including ‘the felon, on obvious grounds.’” Id. at 4 (citation omitted).

Finally, the Government notes that none of the courts to have considered constitutional challenges to Section 922(g)(1) following Bruen have found the provision unconstitutional. ECF Nos. [23] at 5 (citing cases); [39] at 7–9 (citing cases). Indeed, the Government filed a Notice of Authority after the Third Circuit Court of Appeals' decision in Range, the first published circuit court ruling addressing the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1) post-Bruen. See ECF No. [49]. Range found that felons are not among “the people” protected by the Second Amendment, but even if they were, “pertinent historical periods were replete with laws relevantly similar to the modern prohibition on felon firearm possession because they categorically disqualified people from possessing firearms based on a judgment that certain individuals were untrustworthy parties to the nation's social compact.” Id. (quoting Range, 2022 WL 16955670, at *1, *6).

In response, Defendant maintains that the Bruen analysis applies to this case because the Supreme Court “explicitly rejected” the means-end scrutiny test for constitutional challenges to firearms regulations used by “all of the courts of appeals in the wake of [Heller].” ECF No. [27] at 1 (emphasis in original). Defendant notes that the Eleventh Circuit in Rozier “indeed applied the means-end scrutiny[.]” contrary to the Government’s contention that Eleventh Circuit precedent remains controlling, and therefore, it is no longer binding precedent. See ECF No. [44] at 1. As to the Government’s reliance on Heller, Defendant contends that Heller’s “longstanding prohibition” language, which the Government cites to in support of its argument that felons are not of “the people,” is dicta that is not entitled to “talismanic effect,” particularly given that “felon-disarmament laws are not ‘longstanding’ in the sense that Bruen would use that term.” ECF No. [27] at 9 (emphasis in original); see also id. at 4–12. Defendant argues that the Government’s characterization that Bruen only applies to law-abiding citizens because it references law-abiding citizens several times is not persuasive because “courts simply do not read Supreme Court opinions through a process of negative implication” and the references are included because “the only question in Bruen concerned whether New York’s proper-cause requirement infringed ‘law-abiding’ citizens’ right to bear arms[.]” Id. at 15.

Appendix C

As to the other district courts that have considered the issue at hand, Defendant argues that the Government cites to a handful of district court cases which have “made mistakes at the Step Two phase of the Bruen inquiry” though some district courts “have at least agreed with Mr. Pierre at Step One” that felons are among the people. See id. at 27–28. Defendant also notes that at least one court has found a provision of Section 922 to be unconstitutional, and correctly “drew a careful distinction between a defendant’s ‘conduct’—the only relevant consideration after Bruen—and the defendant’s status or category.” Id. at 29 (citing United States v. Quiroz, No. 22-cr-00104, 2022 WL 4352482, at *3 (W.D. Tex. Sept. 19, 2022)).

Finally, Defendant maintains that the Government has not rebutted Section 922(g)(1)’s presumption of constitutionality. Specifically, Defendant attacks the Government’s use of “analogical” reasoning in finding a basis in the historical references for the felon firearm ban because the issue of felons possessing guns existed at the time of the founding, and therefore, the Government must rely on “a ‘distinctly similar’ historical regulation.” ECF No. [44] at 4; see also id. at 2–12. Here, Defendant argues that a “‘distinctly similar’ historical regulation would be one that either denied or substantially abridged all felons’ access to firearms[,]” which the Government cannot show existed. See id. at 4 (emphasis in original). Defendant also argues that the Government’s citations to the limitations of the rights of felons are irrelevant because they concern limitations to civil rights and not to a felon’s constitutional right to bear arms. See id. at 11–12.

III. ANALYSIS

An indictment “may be dismissed where there is an infirmity of law in the prosecution; a court may not dismiss an indictment, however, on a determination of facts that should have been developed at trial.” United States v.

Appendix C

Torkington, 812 F.2d 1347, 1354 (11th Cir. 1987). The indictment’s allegations are assumed to be true and are viewed in the light most favorable to the government. See id. Additionally, “[t]he sufficiency of a criminal indictment is determined from its face.” United States v. Critzer, 951 F.2d 306, 307 (11th Cir. 1992). A defendant may move to dismiss an indictment pursuant to Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 12(b), including for failure to state an offense, lack of jurisdiction, or constitutional reasons. See United States v. Kaley, 677 F.3d 1316, 1325 (11th Cir. 2012).

A. The Court Is Required To Apply The Text And History Framework As Clarified in Bruen In Analyzing Defendant’s Challenge To Section 922(g)(1).

As discussed above, following Bruen, courts analyzing whether a law regulating firearms is constitutional must first begin with the threshold question of whether the plain text of the Second Amendment applies. Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2126. If it does, the conduct is presumptively protected, and the Government “must demonstrate that the regulation is consistent with this Nation’s historical tradition of firearm regulation.” Id. Specifically, in evaluating whether a regulation is consistent with the country’s historical tradition, courts shall determine whether analogous regulations are “relevantly similar” by looking at “how and why the regulations burden a law-abiding citizen’s right to armed self-defense.” Id. at 2132–33.

Appendix C

Before examining the text of the Second Amendment, the Court will address the Government’s argument that Bruen left the Eleventh Circuit’s decision in Rozier intact such that the Court need not even engage in the text and history analysis required by Bruen. See ECF No. [39] at 2–4. The Eleventh Circuit has made clear that a Circuit decision is “binding . . . unless and until it is overruled or undermined to the point of abrogation by the Supreme Court. . . .” United States v. Archer, 531 F.3d 1347, 1352 (11th Cir. 2008) (citing Smith v. GTE Corp., 236 F.3d 1292, 1300 n.8 (11th Cir. 2001)). Of course, such an intervening decision by the Supreme Court “must be clearly on point” in order to overrule Circuit precedent. Id. (quoting Garrett v. Univ. of Ala. at Birmingham Bd. of Trs., 344 F.3d 1288, 1292 (11th Cir. 2003)).

The Parties dispute whether the Eleventh Circuit in Rozier applied the means-end analysis rejected in Bruen. To be sure, the means-end analysis in evaluating a firearm regulation was expressly rejected by Bruen and any case using such a test would be undermined to the point of abrogation. See Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2125–26. Indeed, “where the Supreme Court has clearly set forth a new standard to evaluate” a legal issue, prior Circuit precedent addressing that issue “has been undermined to the point of abrogation and [courts within the Eleventh Circuit] are thus bound to follow th[e] new rule of law.” Archer, 531 F.3d at 1352.

It does not appear, based on the undersigned’s reading of the opinion, that the Eleventh Circuit used the means-end test in Rozier. See also United States v.

Appendix C

Jimenez-Shilon, 34 F.4th 1042, 1052–53 (11th Cir. 2022) (Newsom, J., concurring) (“[W]e have never applied means-ends scrutiny in a published decision analyzing a Second Amendment challenge [T]he important point for present purposes is that we’ve never applied the second step—only imagined it. And because we’ve never applied it in the past, I don’t think we’d be obliged to do so in the future, should the issue squarely present itself.”). There is simply no language or passage in the opinion that could be interpreted as a means-end analysis, and the Court does not find it in the opinion.

However, that does not lead to the conclusion, as the Government advances, that nothing more is required of this Court. Bruen definitively pronounced the standard by which any gun regulation must now be evaluated, a standard that the Supreme Court may have begun articulating in Heller (which was decided before Rozier), but that it did not finish articulating until Bruen (which was decided twelve years after Rozier). In its relatively short analysis of the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1), the Eleventh Circuit in Rozier did not apply the now-required text and history approach of Bruen. Although it relied on Heller, it did not make any determination as to whether a felon was part of “the people” as set out in the plain text of the Second Amendment, nor did it undertake any analysis of the historical record at the time of the founding. Given that Bruen unequivocally mandates courts to apply the text and history standard, the Court is required to do so now. The Court cannot, as the Government urges it to do, simply rely on Rozier and ignore Bruen. In addition, the Government also relies on

In re Felix, No. 22-12661-J, 2022 U.S. App. LEXIS 23434, at *1 (11th Cir. Aug. 22, 2022), to argue that the Eleventh Circuit has already addressed Bruen. ECF No. [23] at 4–5. However, In re Felix, an unpublished opinion, is not applicable because it arose from a successive Section 2255 motion and the Court made no finding or even comment as to the substantive issue, the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1). There, the movant sought to raise a successive motion under Section 2255, arguing that “his conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g) violates his constitutional right to keep and bear arms for self-defense” and his “claim relies on a new, intervening rule of constitutional law,” arguing that Bruen “announced a change in constitutional law regarding ‘the citizen’s fundamental right to carry a handgun for self[-]defense.’” In re Felix, 2022 U.S. App. LEXIS 23434, at *4. Because the standard for granting a successive motion under Section 2255 requires either “(1) [n]ew substantive rules; or (2) a small set of watershed rules of criminal procedure implicating the fundamental fairness and accuracy of the criminal proceeding”, the Eleventh Circuit denied the motion, reasoning that “Bruen did not establish either a new substantive rule of constitutional law or a watershed rule of criminal procedure for purposes of § 2255(h)(2).” Id. at *5, *7 (quoting In re Hammoud, 931 F.3d 1032, 1037 (11th Cir. 2019)). Indeed, the decision specifically noted that “the Supreme Court addressed the right to possess a handgun for self-defense purposes, not the constitutionality of convictions for possessing a firearm as a felon.” Id. at *7. In short, In re Felix is not dispositive of the issue before the Court, nor does it suggest that the Court should not undertake the Bruen analysis.

Appendix C

Accordingly, because Bruen clearly sets out the analysis that courts must now follow in reviewing gun regulations, the undersigned proceeds to apply that standard to determine whether Section 922(g)(1)'s prohibition of felons possessing firearms is constitutional.

1. Defendant's Possession Of A Firearm Falls Within The Plain Text Of The Second Amendment.

To determine whether a firearm regulation offends the protections provided for by the Second Amendment, courts must first look to the Second Amendment's plain text to determine whether it protects that individual's conduct. See Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2126. The text of the Second Amendment reads, "[a] well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed." U.S. Const. amend. II. The only application of the text that the Parties dispute is "of the people"—Defendant contends, as noted above, that he is "of the people" as the plain language makes no limitation for felons or otherwise. The Government relies on its argument that Heller and Rozier are dispositive, but also responds that "of the people" only includes "law abiding citizen[s]", citing to the fact that the term "law abiding" is mentioned "twelve times in the Bruen majority opinion". ECF No. [23] at 3 (quoting Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2134). According to the Government, this language in Bruen resolves the issue because felons are not law-abiding citizens, and therefore, are not "of the people". See ECF No. [39] at 1–3.

Appendix C

The Government’s position is unpersuasive. As the Government acknowledges, “Bruen dealt with the constitutionality of a law that restricted two ‘law-abiding’ citizens who applied for an unrestricted license to carry a handgun in public in New York.” ECF No. [23] at 3. Thus, it is no surprise that the Court used the term “law-abiding” because that was the factual scenario the Court was considering. Indeed, there would have been no reason for the Court in Bruen to address or even consider whether non-law-abiding citizens were part “of the people.” It did not, and Bruen’s references to “law abiding” do not support the Government’s position.

The Government also relies on the passage in Heller that “nothing in our opinion should be taken to cast doubt on longstanding prohibitions on the possession of firearms by felons. . . .” See Heller, 554 U.S. at 626. As an initial matter, that language in Heller is dicta. See United States v. Scroggins, 599 F.3d 433, 451 (5th Cir. 2010) (“Dicta in Heller states that the opinion should not ‘be taken to cast doubt on long-standing prohibitions on possession of firearms by felons. . . .’”) (citation omitted). But see Voisine v. United States, 579 U.S. 686, 715 (2016) (Thomas, J., dissenting on other grounds) (describing Heller’s approval of felon-disarmament laws as “dicta” but suggesting that felons might be outside the scope of the Second Amendment altogether).² Indeed, because Heller

2. Other courts before and after the Bruen decision have also recognized that this language in Heller is dicta. See United States v. Quiroz, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, 2022 WL 4352482, at *5 (W.D. Tex. Sept. 19, 2022) (noting that “Heller’s endorsement of felon-in-possession laws was in dicta”); United States v. Ingram, had no occasion to consider the rights of felons, it cannot be said that that language was necessary to its opinion. See United States v. Kaley, 579 F.3d 1246, 1253 n.10 (11th Cir. 2009) (“[D]icta is defined as those portions of an opinion that are not necessary to deciding the case then before us[.]”) (citation and quotations omitted); United States v. Caraball-Martinez, 866 F.3d 1233, 1244 (11th Cir. 2017) (“We have pointed out many times that regardless of what a court says in its opinion, the decision can hold nothing beyond the facts of that case.”) (citation omitted). Instead, a fair reading of Heller makes clear that the cited language was meant to emphasize the limitations of the decision, not to address the rights of another category of persons that were never considered nor needed to be considered in reaching the Court’s decision. One need not go any further than Heller itself to conclude that Heller did not address the felon firearm ban. Justice Scalia, in writing for the majority, specifically noted that there would “be time enough to expound upon the historical justifications

No. 18-cr-00557, 2022 WL 3691350, at *2 (D.S.C. Aug. 25, 2022) (acknowledging that Heller’s statements that “the right secured by the Second Amendment is not unlimited” and that “nothing in our opinion should be taken to cast doubt on the longstanding prohibitions on the possession of firearms by felon” was dicta); Tyler v. Hillsdale Cnty. Sheriff’s Dept., 837 F.3d 678, 686–87 (6th Cir. 2015) (refusing to give “conclusive effect” to the Heller dicta when analyzing the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(4)); United States v. Skoien, 614 F.3d 638, 639–40 (7th Cir. 2010) (en banc) (describing the “longstanding prohibitions” language as “precautionary” only, and “not dispositive”); United States v. McCane, 573 F.3d 1037, 1049 (10th Cir. 2009) (Tymkovich, J., concurring) (characterizing the “longstanding prohibitions” language in Heller as “the opinion’s deus ex machina dicta”).

for the exceptions . . . if and when those exceptions come before us.” Heller, 554 U.S. at 635. If any argument as to the scope of the Second Amendment’s text can be made based on Heller, it is that the plain language of the Second Amendment covers Defendant. Heller explained that there is a “strong presumption” that the plain text of the Second Amendment refers “to all members of the political community, not an unspecified subset[,]” which is the “unambiguous[]” meaning of the term in “all six other provisions of the Constitution that mention ‘the people[.]’” Id. at 580–81; see also id. at 580 (“[T]he people’ seems to have been a term of art employed in select parts of the Constitution [Its uses] sugges[t] that ‘the people’ refers to a class of persons who are part of a national community or who have otherwise developed sufficient connection with this country to be considered part of that community.”) (citation omitted).

The undersigned finds that based on its plain text, Defendant is included in the Second Amendment’s “of the people,” as there is no qualification in the text that would serve to exclude him. See United States v. Price, No. 22-cr-00097, 2022 WL 6968457, at *7 (S.D.W. Va. Oct. 12, 2022) (“The plain text of the Second Amendment does not include a qualification that Second Amendment rights belong only to individuals who have not violated any laws.”) (quotations and citation omitted); United States v. Jackson, No. 22-cr-00059, 2022 WL 3582504, at *2 (W.D. Okla. Aug. 19, 2022) (“This Court declines to read into Bruen a qualification that Second Amendment rights belong only to individuals who have not violated any laws.”). The Supreme Court has instructed that courts be “guided by the principle that ‘[t]he Constitution was written to be understood by the voters[,]’ that is, how the words would have “been known to ordinary citizens in the founding generation.” Heller, 554 U.S. at 576–77. Indeed, at the time of ratification, founding-era dictionaries defined “people” as encompassing the entire political community. See THOMAS DYCHE & WILLIAM PARDON, A NEW GENERAL ENGLISH DICTIONARY (14th ed. 1771) (“signifies every person, or the whole collection of inhabitants in a nation or kingdom”). Additionally, to define “the people” otherwise would produce absurd results because, as the Court noted in Heller, the term applies across the various provisions of the Constitution in which it is used. See Heller, 554 U.S. at 579–80. Indeed, a reading of “the people” that excludes felons from Second Amendment rights might also lead to an exclusion of other constitutional rights, such as First Amendment rights, that are afforded to “all the people.”

This reading of the Second Amendment’s plain text was also advanced by the Eleventh Circuit, albeit in a different context. In Jimenez-Shilon, the Eleventh Circuit considered whether immigrants without lawful status were part “of the people.” See 34 F.4th at 1044–46. In doing so, the Court noted that “as both the Supreme Court and this Court have observed, even individuals who are indisputably part of ‘the people,’ such as dangerous felons and those suffering from mental illness, might not partake of that pre-existing right and, therefore, may be prohibited from possessing firearms without offending the Second Amendment.” Id. at 1046 (citing Heller, 554 U.S. at 626, 635); see also United States v. Meza-Rodriguez, 798 F.3d 664, 672 (7th Cir. 2015) (holding that persons without authorized immigration status were protected by the Second Amendment, finding that “we see no principled way to carve out the Second Amendment and say that the unauthorized (or maybe all noncitizens) are excluded”). Accordingly, the undersigned finds that Defendant is part “of the people” protected by the plain language of the Second Amendment. Whether Defendant is otherwise prohibited from partaking in that pre-existing right is determined by the next question: Does the prohibition of possessing a firearm as a felon comport with our historical tradition of firearm regulation?³

3. Considering the historical review in determining the meaning of the plain text would not yield a different result, as noted below. In addition, separating the two issues and considering the historical references in the second part of the analysis, is more consistent with the analysis that was conducted by the Supreme Court in Bruen. See also Kanter v. Barr, 919 F.3d 437, 451–52 (7th Cir. 2019) (Barrett, J., dissenting) (noting that there are “competing ways of approaching the constitutionality of gun dispossession laws,” one that finds certain people fall outside the groups of people, and one “that maintain[s] that all people have the right to keep and bear arms but that history and tradition support Congress’s power to strip certain groups of that right” Although both “approaches will typically yield the same result; one uses history and tradition to identify the scope of the right, and the other uses that same body of evidence to identify the scope of the legislature’s power to take it away . . . the latter is the better way to approach the problem.”), abrogated by Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2111.

*Appendix C2. Prohibiting Felons From Possessing Firearms Is Consistent With The Historical Tradition Of The Nation's Firearm Regulations.

Given that Defendant's possession of a firearm falls within the plain language of the Second Amendment, it is now the Government's burden to demonstrate that prohibiting Defendant from possessing a firearm is "consistent with the Nation's historical tradition of firearm regulation." Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2130. As an initial matter, the undersigned notes that the Government's Response did not meaningfully address this issue. See ECF No. [23]. In its Sur-Reply, the Government addresses its burden primarily by citing to other district court decisions outside this Circuit. See ECF No. [39] at 4–7. Ultimately, however, the Government seeks to meet its burden by relying on the Third Circuit's historical analysis in Range. See ECF No. [49]. Defendant responds that Range is not final, non-binding, and simply wrong. See ECF No. [52].

Before reviewing the historical references relied upon by the Government, the Court must first address the issue at the heart of Defendant's response to Range, an issue Defendant advanced in his Motion: what kind of historical reference is sufficient for the Government to meet its burden. Specifically, must the historical support for the regulation at issue be "relevantly similar" to the restriction at hand, such that analogical reasoning is permissible, or, as the Defendant argues, must the historical support meet the more demanding standard of being "distinctly similar" to a regulation from the founding era? See ECF No. [52] at 11–12. Defendant argues that the “relevantly similar” standard which permits analogical reasoning is only permissible “where the problem addressed by the ‘regulation at issue’ was ‘unimaginable’ at the [f]ounding[.]” Id. at 11. If the problem was one that was present at the time of the founding, Defendant argues that analogical reasoning is not permitted, and the Government can only meet its burden by finding a regulation in the founding era that is “distinctly similar” to the ban found in Section 922(g)(1). Id. at 11–12.

The Court need only look to Bruen to resolve this question and in doing so does not find support for Defendant’s position. In Bruen, the Court laid out how the Nation’s historical understanding of firearms regulations might be measured by noting that:

[i]n some cases, that inquiry will be fairly straightforward. For instance, when a challenged regulation addresses a general societal problem that has persisted since the 18th century, the lack of a distinctly similar historical regulation addressing that problem is relevant evidence that the challenged regulation is inconsistent with the Second Amendment. Likewise, if earlier generations addressed the societal problem, but did so through materially different means, that also could be evidence that a modern regulation is unconstitutional. And if some jurisdictions actually attempted to enact analogous regulations during this timeframe, but those proposals were rejected on constitutional grounds, that rejection surely would provide some probative evidence of unconstitutionality.

Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2131. Defendant reads this language as creating a distinction between “relevantly similar” and “distinctly similar.” See ECF No. [52] at 11–12. Although the Court sought to explain how the historical record might be measured under various scenarios, it did not, at least not by this Court’s reading, create a different standard if the problem addressed by the regulation is one that existed at the time of the founding. Indeed, in describing the Court’s review of the historical record in Heller, Justice Thomas in Bruen noted that the societal problem, “firearm violence in densely populated communities[,]” was a problem that could have been addressed by the Founders, and then described the Court’s review of the historical record as one that yielded no laws that were “analogous” to the regulation at issue in Heller. See Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2131. The Court went on to explain that two of the metrics that courts should consider in reviewing whether historical understanding of a regulation is “relevantly similar” includes “how and why the regulations burden a law-abiding citizen’s right to armed self-defense.” Id. at 2133. In doing so, the Court made clear that:

analogical reasoning under the Second Amendment is neither a regulatory straightjacket nor a regulatory blank check. . . . [A]nalogical reasoning requires only that the government identify a well-established and representative historical analogue, not a historical twin. So even if a modern-day regulation is not a dead ringer for historical precursors, it still may be analogous enough to pass constitutional muster.

Id. (emphasis in original). Given this language, this Court finds no support in Bruen (and no other support is provided by Defendant) for a “distinctly similar” analysis being required in evaluating the historical understanding of limitations on a felon’s right to possess a firearm. Instead, the Supreme Court’s language provides guidance when the issues at hand involve “modern regulations that were unimaginable at the founding[,]” noting that reasoning by analogy requires a court to review whether the historical context is relevantly similar. Id. at 2132. Moreover, whether the regulation was unimaginable at the founding is different than whether the societal problem, as Defendant posits in his Motion, was unimaginable. See ECF No. [16] at 10–11. Indeed, the Court in Bruen, as it did in Heller, combed the historical record in search of analogous regulations, and in each case found no examples that were similar to either the ban on weapons in the home reviewed in Heller or the subjective limitations placed by New York’s open carry law in Bruen. See Heller, 554 U.S. at 628–34; Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2138.

Instead, the Court must consider whether there is “a well-established and representative historical analogue” to the limitation on felons possessing firearms as found in Section 922(g)(1)—specifically, whether Section 922(g)

Appendix C

(1) is “consistent with the Nation’s historical tradition of firearm regulation.” Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2126, 2133 (emphasis removed). That is all that is required. Although various district courts in other circuits have analyzed this issue, the Parties did not identify (and the Court did not find) any district court in this Circuit to have considered the constitutionality of Section 922(g)(1) in a written opinion since Bruen, and the Third Circuit Court of Appeals is the only Circuit to issue a published opinion on the matter to date.⁴ Although the Government encourages the Court to simply follow these other district courts, such an argument is unhelpful not only because those opinions do not bind this Court, but also because the other district courts that have found the ban to be constitutional have done so based on a variety of different reasons.⁵ In short,

4. It should also be noted that the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals recently (and swiftly) denied an as-applied challenge to Section 922(g)(1), noting that they were not aware of any authority supporting an argument that a violent felon “historically had the right to possess a gun. Thus, it would be frivolous to argue that Section 922(g)(1) is unconstitutional as applied to [the defendant].” United States v. Gonzalez, No. 22-1242, 2022 WL 4376074, at *2 (7th Cir. Sept. 22, 2022).

5. Indeed, those district court decisions to date fall loosely under at least six categories. First, a number of courts concluded that a felon is part of “the people” but that the ban is consistent with the Nation’s historical tradition of gun regulation. See United States v. Carrero, No. 22-cr-00030, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, ---, 2022 WL 9348792, at *3 (D. Utah Oct. 14, 2022); United States v. Coombes, No. 22-cr-00189, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, ---, ---, 2022 WL 4367056, at *8, *11 (N.D. Okla. Sept. 21, 2022); United States v. Charles, No. 22-cr-00154, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, ---, 2022 WL 4913900, at *11 (W.D. Tex. Oct. 3, 2022); United States v. Collette,

Appendix C

No. 22-cr-10041, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, ---, 2022 WL 4476790, at *8 (W.D. Tex. Sept. 25, 2022). Second, some courts determined that the plain text of the Second Amendment covers the conduct at issue, but conducted no historical analysis, simply finding that the provision is constitutional on the grounds that such a holding is consistent with precedent from those courts. See United States v. Price, No. 22-cr-00097, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, ---, 2022 WL 6968457, at *9 (S.D.W. Va. Oct. 12, 2022); United States v. Cockerham, No. 21-cr-00006, 2022 WL 4229314, at *2 (S.D. Miss. Sept. 13, 2022). Third, some courts have found that the challenge is precluded by precedent, an even if it were not, the challenge would fail under the Bruen analysis, as the conduct is not protected by the Second Amendment's plain text, see United States v. Trinidad, No. 21-cr-00398, 2022 WL 10067519, at *3 (D.P.R. Oct. 17, 2022), and also would fail because prohibition of felons from possessing firearms is consistent with historical tradition, see United States v. Young, No. 22-cr-00054, 2022 WL 16829260, at *11 (W.D. Pa. Nov. 7, 2022); United States v. Riley, No. 22-cr-00163, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, ---, ---, 2022 WL 7610264, at *10, *13 (E.D. Va. Oct. 13, 2022). Fourth, two Southern District of California courts found that the firearm prohibition on felons is consistent with precedent and consistent with historical tradition. See United States v. Hill, No. 21-cr-00107, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, ---, ---, 2022 WL 4361917, at *3 (S.D. Cal. Sept. 20, 2022); United States v. Ridgeway, No. 22-cr-00175, 2022 WL 10198823, *2 (S.D. Cal. Oct. 17, 2022). Fifth, other courts have found that Bruen does not disturb prior precedent and Bruen and/or prior precedent forecloses a finding that the provision is unconstitutional, without engaging in the Bruen analysis. See United States v. Raheem, No. 20-cr-00061, 2022 WL 10177684, at *3 (W.D. Ky. Oct. 17, 2022); United States v. Siddoway, No. 21-cr-00205, 2022 WL 4482739, at *2 (D. Idaho Sept. 27, 2022); United States v. Jackson, No. 21-cr-00051, 2022 WL 4226229, at *3 (D. Minn. Sept. 13, 2022); United States v. Ingram, No. 18-cr-00557, --- F. Supp. 3d ---, ---, 2022 WL 3691350, at *3 (D.S.C. Aug. 25, 2022); United States v. Minter, encouraging this Court to follow the pack, when the pack is going down different paths (albeit to reach the same result), is not an argument the Court finds particularly persuasive.

The Court will now turn to the historical record provided by the Government in its Sur-Reply, ECF No. [39], and by the Third Circuit in Range, which the Government adopted, ECF No. [49].⁶ For the reasons noted below, the undersigned finds the Third Circuit's reasoning in Range to be comprehensive and persuasive, and adopts it herein. First, the Government and the court in Range each cite to sources before colonial America. That analysis supports the Government's reading that the historical record supports the ban in Section 922(g)(1). The Supreme Court has made clear that the rights enshrined in the Second Amendment are "pre-existing" and, therefore, history from the late 1600's as well as American colonial times are instructive in determining the relevant historical references. See Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2127; see also id. at 2136 ("Constitutional rights are 22-cr-00135, 2022 WL 10662252, at *4 (M.D. Pa. Oct. 18, 2022). Finally, one court summarily denied a motion to dismiss, given that other courts have rejected such a challenge. See United States v. Burrell, No. 21-cr-20395, 2022 WL 4096865, at *3 (E.D. Mich. Sept. 7, 2022).

6. Bruen made clear that it is the burden of the party seeking to impose a regulation to demonstrate that such regulation of firearms is consistent with the historical tradition of the United States. See Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2150 ("Of course, we are not obliged to sift the historical materials for evidence to sustain New York's statute. That is respondents' burden.").

enshrined with the scope they were understood to have when the people adopted them.") (quoting Heller, 554 U.S. at 634–35) (emphasis in original). In Bruen, the Court cautioned that courts may “reac[h] back” to earlier time periods to recognize whether practices continued “up to the ‘period immediately before and after the framing of the Constitution[,]’” but otherwise, historical evidence arising long before the Nation’s founding may be less relevant to understanding the scope of the right as it was understood at the time of ratification. Id. at 2136 (quoting Sprint Commc’ns Co. v. APCC Servs., Inc., 554 U.S. 269, 311 (2008) (Roberts, C. J., dissenting)). The Third Circuit found that “colonial history furnishes numerous examples in which full-fledged members of the political community as it then existed—i.e., free, Christian, white men—were disarmed due to conduct evincing inadequate faithfulness to the sovereign and its laws.” Range, 2022 WL 16955670, at *8. In 1689, England disarmed Catholics because at that time, “[d]isavowal of religious tenets” demonstrated “a disregard for the legally binding decrees of the sovereign.” See id. at *8.

During the colonial period, “[d]ating back to 1637, the Massachusetts colony enacted a law that required named individuals who expressed ‘opinion & revelations,’ that seduced [and] le[d] into dangerous errors many of the people’ of New England to turn in all ‘guns, pistol, swords, powder, shot & match.’” United States v. Young, No. 22-cr-00054, 2022 WL 16829260, at *8 (W.D. Pa. Nov. 7, 2022) (citing Eric M. Ruben and Darrell A. H. Miller, Gun Law History in the United States and Second Amendment Rights, 80 LAW & CONTEMP. PROBS. 55, 72 (2017)). In Range, the court specifically noted that the Massachusetts Bay Government “disarmed at least fifty-eight of [an outspoken preacher’s] supporters[.]” 2022 WL 16955670, at *9 (citing James F. Cooper, Jr., Anne Hutchinson and the “Lay Rebellion” Against the Clergy, 61 NEW ENG. Q. 381, 391 (1988)). Additionally, “Maryland—as well as Virginia and Pennsylvania—confiscated firearms from their Catholic residents during the Seven Years’ War[.]” Id. (citing Michael A. Bellesiles, Gun Laws in Early America: The Regulation of Firearms Ownership, 1607–1794, 16 LAW & HIST. REV. 567, 574 (1998)); see also Joseph G.S. Greenlee, The Historical Justification for Prohibiting Dangerous Persons from Possessing Arms, 20 WYO. L. REV. 249, 263 (2020)); Heller, 554 U.S. at 582 (“William Blackstone, for example, wrote that Catholics convicted of not attending service in the Church of England suffered certain penalties, one of which was that they were not permitted to ‘keep arms in their houses.’”) (citing 4 COMMENTARIES ON THE LAWS OF ENGLAND 55 (1769)). Additionally, “[m]any of the states, whose own constitutions entitled their citizens to be armed, did not extend this right to persons convicted of crime.” United States v. Skoien, 614 F.3d 638, 640 (7th Cir. 2010) (citing Stephen P. Halbrook, The Founders’ Second Amendment 273 (2008)). Indeed, Massachusetts disarmed “such Persons as are notoriously disaffected to the Cause of America, or who refuse to associate to defend by Arms the United American Colonies.” Folajtar v. Att’y Gen. of the United States, 980 F.3d 897, 908 (3d Cir. 2020), cert. denied sub nom. Folajtar v. Garland, 209 L. Ed. 2d 546 (2021) (quoting Saul Cornell & Nathan DeDino, A Well Regulated Right: The Early American Origins of Gun Control, 73 Fordham L. Rev. 487, 506 (2004)).

Appendix C

The Court in Bruen also recognized the usefulness of post-enactment history, also considered by the Court in Range. While the Supreme Court has cautioned “against giving postenactment history more weight than it can rightly bear[,]” it also noted that evidence regarding “how the Second Amendment was interpreted” immediately post-ratification can be a “critical tool of constitutional interpretation.” Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2136 (quoting Heller, 554 U.S. at 605). Post-enactment history concerning prohibiting felons from possessing firearms is consistent with the Court’s foregoing analysis. Indeed, “most scholars of the Second Amendment agree that the right to bear arms was ‘inextricably . . . tied to’ the concept of a ‘virtuous citizen[ry]’ . . . and that ‘the right to bear arms does not preclude laws disarming the unvirtuous citizens (i.e. criminals). . . .’” United States v. Vongxay, 594 F.3d 1111, 1118 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Don B. Kates, Jr., The Second Amendment: A Dialogue, 49 LAW & CONTEMP. PROBS. 143, 146 (1986)); see also Glenn Harlan Reynolds, A Critical Guide to the Second Amendment, 62 TENN. L. REV. 461, 480 (1995) (noting that felons “were excluded from the right to arms” because they were “deemed incapable of virtue”). Accordingly, “[f]elons ‘were excluded from the right to arms’ because they were deemed unvirtuous.” United States v. Carpio-Leon, 701 F.3d 974, 980 (4th Cir. 2012) (quoting Reynolds, A Critical Guide to the Second Amendment, 62 TENN. L. REV. at 480)).

Because the Government need only show a well-established and representative historical analogue, it has met its burden by showing that there were various limitations to the right to bear arms connected to the idea of virtuous citizenry. The analogues provided above are sufficient to support the argument that the felon firearm ban, as written today, is supported by our Nation's historical tradition of firearm regulation. Indeed, these analogues are well-established and show that at the time of the founding, the government restricted the right to possess firearms for categories of persons who were not considered "virtuous" or who otherwise failed to abide by certain laws. These examples are representative, historical analogues to the restriction at issue here, which bans felons (members of society who have failed to abide by certain laws) from possessing firearms.

Defendant argues that even if the Third Circuit correctly applied the "relevantly similar" standard, the laws identified in the Third Circuit's historical analysis are not in fact "relevantly similar" to Section 922(g)(1). See ECF No. [52] at 12–14. According to Defendant, the pre- and post-colonial laws relied on in Range are not "relevantly similar" to Section 922(g)(1) because those laws "did not 'impose a comparable burden on the right of armed self-defense.'" Id. at 13 (citing Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2133). Defendant argues that the state laws "endured only as long as someone declined to declare loyalty to the state[.]" as opposed to a permanent deprivation of a Constitutional right. Id. Additionally, Defendant attempts to draw a distinction between the historical analogues and the provision at issue here by arguing that Section 922(g)(1) "seeks to prevent interpersonal violence by people previously convicted of a crime" whereas the historical statutes "were meant to neutralize those 'considered dangerous to the state [.]'" Id. Defendant's arguments call for a level of similarity between Section 922(g)(1) and our historical traditions that is not required. The fact that some of the historical examples limited the rights of people who threatened the state might address “why” their rights were limited, but their rights were limited for any purpose. Indeed, someone deemed a threat to the state was also not allowed to possess a firearm for their protection. These references are persuasive because they took an entire group of people (the unvirtuous) and stripped them of their right to possess a firearm for any reason.

Although Bruen points us to the “how and “why,” it also advises that there need not be an exact analogue to restricting the rights of felons, or even a particular kind of felon (including dangerous versus not dangerous). The issue is not whether there were laws disarming felons at the time of the founding in the exact manner that Section 922(g)(1) disarms felons. Indeed, if that were the inquiry, the decision would be quite simple because the standard could never be met, as an all-felon ban does appear to be of the twentieth century vintage. The issue is whether there are relevantly similar, analogous examples from the founding that the Court can rely on to find that today’s ban in Section 922(g)(1) is consistent with the historical limitations on the Second Amendment. While Defendant seeks to minimize the historical analysis conducted by the Third Circuit, the pre-colonial, colonial, and post-colonial evidence confirms that there were several, well-established instances of disarming non-virtuous citizens at the time that the Second Amendment was ratified. These examples are sufficient to show that there was a tradition of limiting the possession of firearms for classes of citizens based on conduct that was unvirtuous. Because the specific question that Bruen dictates we resolve is whether the present felon firearm ban is “consistent with the Nation’s historical tradition of firearm regulation[,]” and given that our historical tradition of firearm regulation included limitations for those that, although part of the polity, failed to abide by the rules of a civil society, the historical analysis is met. These historical references, as Bruen dictates, are “well-established and representative historical analogue[s].” They are not “historical twin[s,]” but they need not be. See Bruen, 142 S. Ct. at 2133 (emphasis removed).
