APPLICATION FOR AN EXTENSION OF TIME WITHIN WHICH TO FILE A PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

To the Honorable Neil M. Gorsuch, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and Circuit Justice for the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit.

Pursuant to this Court's Rules 13.5, 21, 22, and 30.2, Applicants Grace Bible Fellowship and Joey Rhoads hereby move for a 60-day extension of time, to and including September 23, 2024, within which to file a petition for a writ of certiorari. A petition in the Tenth Circuit for rehearing en banc was declined on April 26, 2024. Grace Bible Fellowship v. Polis, 23-1148. App. at 1a. This Application complies with the Court's Rule 30.2 by seeking an extension of time at least ten days prior to the current deadline to seek a writ, July 25, 2024.

BACKGROUND

In this dispute over individual rights in a declared emergency, the district court noted the gravity of the government's interpretation of its constitutional and statutory authority to issue mandates under state statutes, stating: "That these statutes have been used in the recent past to adopt public health orders that likely discriminated against religious activity is troubling. That the State at one point argued that the federal courts owe near-total deference to its determinations as to what extraordinary measures are warranted, and what counts as emergency that justifies such measures, is even more so." Grace Bible Fellowship v. Polis, Case No. 1:20-cv-02362-DDD-NRN (slip op. at 14) (D. Colo. Mar. 22, 2023).

After Applicants were subjected to such mandates for many months, their original complaint, mainly directed at the language in the orders, was deemed moot. The district court's order, which had granted partial preliminary injunctive relief, see Cmty. Baptist Church v. Polis, No. 20-1391, 2012WL 200661, at *7 (10th Cir. 2022), was vacated and the case was dismissed. In an amended complaint, Applicants repleaded the focus of the case, dropping the claims against the mandates. Instead, the amended complaint asserts challenges to specific language in the underlying state statutes, ostensibly the legal basis for what was months of repeating, 30-day-mandates. Under the First and Fourteenth Amendments, Applicants reassert a claim that exceptions in the disaster emergency statute violate the free exercise of religion, and they claim that the underlying statutes deprived them of secular and religious speech as well as equal protection.

The overarching question in this case is:

At the pleading stage, where Applicants attest that state statutes caused them actual injuries and, being barred from seeking damages by the Eleventh Amendment, they seek only declaratory judgment that the challenged statutes are unconstitutional, do Applicants nevertheless lack standing by a failure to allege either imminent injury or that officials are "still in the process" of acting under the unconstitutional statutes? The panel in the case at bar held that, under 28 U.S.C. §2201, Applicants' actual injury does not afford standing to seek declaratory relief in the absence of either of the allegations just stated.

Applicants seek declaratory relief against the statutes, not an adjudication that Respondent's actions were unconstitutional, although standing's "injury component" is intertwined with Applicants constitutional claims. At the pleading stage, the alleged injuries should be deemed true.

The panel's opinion seems to conflict with the decision in Super Tire Engineering, Co. v. McCorkle, 416 U.S. 115 (1974). OB at 27. Even though the tire company's injury from a strike was no longer "in process" after a strike ended, the Court upheld the company's standing to seek declaratory relief inasmuch as the statute's funding for striking workers was "lurking in the background" in every labor negotiation as an ongoing incentive for labor strikes. In the case at bar, the challenged disaster emergency statute is written to coordinate with federal statutes so as to be the legal conduit for federal emergency funding. As such, federal funding is lurking in the background as an incentive for the governor's decision to declare disaster emergencies, particularly where, in the case at bar, the state obtained tens of billions of dollars and other federal aid on the condition that it implement virus mitigation measures such as caused Applicants' injury. See also United Food and Commercial Workers Intern. Union, AFL-CIO v. IBP, Inc., 857 F.2d 422 (8th Cir. 1988) (upholding standing to challenge the state's mass-picketing statute despite the fact that the union had ended its strike prior to filing suit).

Moreover, the panel's opinion seems to conflict with this Court's rulings on standing in First Amendment cases where government action is capable of repetition but evading review. In its opinion regarding the individual mandates, the district court noted that Respondents' practice of issuing new mandates created a "moving target" for Applicants and the court itself. Denver Bible Church v. Azar, 494 F. Supp. 3d 816, n. 9 (D. Colo. Oct. 15, 2020). But the cause of the "moving target" is rooted in the disaster statute's provision for the expiration, but indefinite reissuance, of mandates on a 30-day basis. C.R.S. §24-33.5-704(4). Notably, of the original complaint's challenge to numerous, specific mandates, almost none were adjudicated except the ones in force at the time of district court and appellate review.

However, in Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Court for Norfolk County, 457 U.S. 596 (1982), this Court upheld First Amendment standing where, as is the case here, the challenged order was of short duration. And, in Nebraska Press Association v. Stuart, 427 U.S. 539 (1976), this Court upheld standing despite the expiration of a challenged order inasmuch as it could be "reasonably assumed" that, as a newspaper, it would "someday be subjected to another order relying on the [challenged statute]." Id. at 603. Likewise, here, the 30-day-duration of mandates issued under the challenged statutes makes the government's actions capable of repetition but evading review. Respondents never stipulated that Applicant's First Amendment and Equal Protection rights would not be violated in the future and in fact, essentially reserved their prerogative to do so.

The panel's requirement for standing to allege a claim for declaratory relief seems to conflict with other circuits in a related context. In considering an Eleventh Amendment defense, as opposed to standing, the court in Porter v. Jones, 319 F.3d 483 (9th Cir. 2003), rejected the argument that state officials must be "caught in the act" in order to seek a declaration that a statute violates the First Amendment. "Under Ex Parte Young, suits against an official for prospective relief are generally cognizable, whereas claims for retrospective relief (damages) are not. [Citations omitted]. Jones claims that Plaintiffs may not, consistent with the Eleventh Amendment, adjudicate the legality of past conduct. This argument confuses liability with remedy. Although Plaintiffs' allegations are rooted in events that occurred in the past, the injunctive and declaratory relief that they seek would prevent future and ongoing illegality. The Eleventh Amendment poses no bar to Plaintiffs' claims for prospective relief." Id. at 491.

Similarly, the court in Summit Medical Associates, P.C. v. Pryor, 180 F.3d 1326 (11th Cir. 1999), noting that violations of federal law may be remedied by prospective relief, specifically declined to graft any sort of "imminency requirement" onto the Ex Parte Young doctrine inasmuch as no Supreme Court precedent required such an obligation. In a footnote, the court noted that an imminency requirement pertained only to injunctive relief. Id. at n. 11, citing Morales v. Trans World Airlines, Inc., 504 U.S. 374 (1992).

On another issue in the case at bar, the panel's opinion appears to conflict with this Court's opinion on mootness in Federal Bureau of Investigation v. Fikre, 601 U.S. ___, No. 22-1178 (Mar. 19, 2024), issued just ten days prior to the panel's decision in the instant case.

REASONS FOR GRANTING AN EXTENSION OF TIME

1. This Application is prompted by Respondent governor's new virus-caused declaration of a disaster emergency, on or about July 8, 2024.

https://www.theepochtimes.com/us/colorado-governor-declares-disaster-emergency-over-bird-flu-outbreak-5682947?instaaccount=secb64bHdyMDc4M0BnbWFpbC5jb20&rs=SHRPXCMS&utm_campaign=mb-cc&utm_content=eet&utm_medium=email&utm_term=freeuser. The virus this time is bird flu. Applicants desire more time to seek certiorari on the amended complaint's challenge to specific language contained in the challenged statutes.

2. No prejudice should result to Respondents because the requested extension of time will mean that vacations, Labor Day celebrations, and the start-of-school activities will take place before Respondents might wish to draft response briefs to the petition.

3. The panel ruling in this case conflicts with a plain reading of the Declaratory Judgment Act, this Court's and the circuit court opinions, cited above. The requested 60-day extension of time to file a petition for writ of certiorari will help in presenting the important issues of standing, mootness and any subsidiary issues for purposes of the Court's determination to grant a writ of certiorari or not.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Applicants respectfully request that the time to file a petition for a writ of certiorari in this matter be extended 60 days, up to and including September 23, 2024.

ORDER AND JUDGMENT*

Before MORITZ, MURPHY, and CARSON, Circuit Judges.

Grace Bible Fellowship and its pastor, Joey Rhoads, appeal the district court’s order dismissing their amended complaint.¹ Because we agree that plaintiffs fail to demonstrate the injury required for constitutional standing as to most of their claims,

* This order and judgment is not binding precedent, except under the doctrines of law of the case, res judicata, and collateral estoppel. But it may be cited for its persuasive value. See Fed. R. App. P. 32.1(a); 10th Cir. R. 32.1(A).

that one of their claims is moot, and that they fail to state their remaining claim, we affirm.

Background

Plaintiffs filed their original complaint in August 2020, challenging various COVID-19 restrictions imposed by Colorado and the federal government’s award of COVID-19 relief funds to Colorado. Plaintiffs also moved to preliminarily enjoin Colorado from enforcing its executive and public-health orders and to prohibit various federal agencies from approving or providing any future monetary assistance to the state. The district court largely denied plaintiffs’ motion, ruling that they failed to make the required strong showing of a substantial likelihood of success on the merits. See Denver Bible Church v. Azar, 494 F. Supp. 3d 816, 822–23 (D. Colo. 2020).²

Plaintiffs appealed, but by the time the case reached oral argument in November 2021, Colorado no longer imposed any COVID-19 restrictions on plaintiffs, so we dismissed most of their claims as moot. See Cmty. Baptist Church v. Polis, No. 20-1391, 2022 WL 200661, at *1, 7 (10th Cir. Jan. 24, 2022) (unpublished). And on plaintiffs’ facial free-exercise challenge to the Colorado Disaster Emergency Act (CDEA), Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 24-33.5-701 to 24-33.5-717, we affirmed the denial of a preliminary injunction because plaintiffs were unlikely to succeed on the merits. Id. at *7.

² The district court did issue a relatively narrow preliminary injunction against Colorado’s numerical occupancy limitation and masking requirement for worship services. See Denver Bible Church, 494 F. Supp. 3d at 843–44. Colorado initially appealed that order but then voluntarily dismissed its appeal. See Denver Bible Church v. Polis, No. 20-1377 (10th Cir. Dec. 23, 2020) (order granting motion to voluntarily dismiss appeal).

On remand, the district court dismissed the moot claims, and plaintiffs filed an amended complaint challenging “the State’s authority to impose any sort of public-health restrictions . . . on houses of worship[] and . . . assert[ing] that certain state statutes that authorize the issuance of such public-health orders impermissibly treat secular institutions more favorably than religious ones.” App. vol. 3, 645. The amended complaint listed 14 claims, alleging that both the CDEA and certain public-health statutes that govern the CDPHE, Colo. Rev. Stat. §§ 25-1.5-101 and 25-1.5-102, (1) are unconstitutionally overbroad and violate plaintiffs’ free-speech rights both facially and as applied; (2) are unconstitutionally vague both facially and as applied; and (3) violate equal protection both facially and as applied. Plaintiffs also reasserted two claims from their original complaint, contending that the CDEA violates their free-exercise rights both facially and as applied. For relief, plaintiffs requested a “declaratory judgment and permanent injunctive relief . . . declaring [their] rights under [the] CDEA and the [p]ublic[-h]ealth [s]tatutes and prohibiting [d]efendants . . . from issuing, enforcing[,], or threatening to enforce . . . any executive orders and/or public[-]health orders issued” under those laws. App. vol. 1, 36.

Defendants moved to dismiss the claims against them for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and (6), arguing that plaintiffs lacked standing, that their claims were moot, and that they failed to state a claim. In support, defendants submitted affidavits and evidence demonstrating that no executive or public-health orders issued under the challenged statutes were currently in effect.

The district court granted defendants' motions and dismissed the amended complaint, concluding that plaintiffs lacked standing to bring their newly asserted claims because plaintiffs failed to allege the required injury. As to the reasserted claims, the district found that the as-applied CDEA free-exercise claim was moot, as we had previously ruled, and that plaintiffs' facial CDEA free-exercise claim failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.³

Plaintiffs now appeal the dismissal of their claims for prospective declaratory relief.⁴

Analysis

Plaintiffs argue that the district court erred in dismissing their claims. Our review is de novo, except that we review any jurisdictional findings of fact for clear error. See Baker v. USD 229 Blue Valley, 979 F.3d 866, 871 (10th Cir. 2020) (noting de novo review of Rule 12(b)(1) dismissal and clear-error review of jurisdictional fact findings); Serna v. Denver Police Dep't, 58 F.4th 1167, 1169 (10th Cir. 2023) (noting de novo review of Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal); Rio Grande Found. v. Oliver, 57 F.4th 1147, 1159 (10th Cir. 2023) (noting de novo review of standing and mootness).

⁴ Plaintiffs do not appeal the attorney-fee ruling or the dismissal of their claims for a permanent injunction.

As an initial matter, plaintiffs argue that the district court procedurally erred by considering evidence outside the complaint when dismissing their newly asserted claims for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(1). To be sure, defendants factually attacked the district court’s subject-matter jurisdiction by submitting evidence showing the absence of any existing executive or public-health orders issued under the challenged statutes. And the district court considered that evidence when ruling that plaintiffs failed to establish any current and ongoing or imminent injury, as required to obtain the requested prospective relief on their newly asserted claims. But it did not err in doing so.

A Rule 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction can take two forms: a facial or a factual attack. Baker, 979 F.3d at 872. “A facial attack assumes the allegations in the complaint are true and argues they fail to establish jurisdiction.” Id. By contrast, “[a] factual attack goes beyond the allegations in the complaint and adduces evidence to contest jurisdiction.” Id. And when faced with a factual attack on subject-matter jurisdiction, the district court has “wide discretion to allow affidavits, other documents, and a limited evidentiary hearing to resolve disputed jurisdictional facts.” Id. (quoting Stuart v. Colo. Interstate Gas Co., 271 F.3d 1221, 1225 (10th Cir. 2001)). The district court’s “exercise of such discretion does not convert a Rule 12(b)(1) motion into a summary[-]judgment motion unless ‘resolution of the jurisdictional question is intertwined with the merits,’” which is not the case here. Id. (quoting Holt v. United States, 46 F.3d 1000, 1003 (10th Cir. 1995), abrogated in part on other grounds by Cent. Green Co. v. United States, 531 U.S.

425 (2001)). Additionally, although plaintiffs suggest in passing that the district court further erred by failing to conduct a hearing, they never asked for a hearing below and do not explain on appeal how failing to conduct one here was an abuse of discretion. See id. (noting “wide discretion” to allow evidentiary hearing on jurisdictional facts). We therefore reject plaintiffs’ procedural challenge to the district court’s jurisdictional rulings.

Turning to the merits of the jurisdictional matters, Article III of the Constitution confines the federal judicial power to deciding “[c]ases” and “[c]ontroversies.” U.S. Const. art. III, § 2. This constitutional limitation requires “a genuine, live dispute between adverse parties, thereby preventing the federal courts from issuing advisory opinions.” Carney v. Adams, 592 U.S. 53, 58 (2020). “The doctrines of standing and mootness aim to ensure federal courts stay within Article III’s bounds throughout the litigation.” Rio Grande, 57 F.4th at 1159–60. To establish Article III standing, a plaintiff must demonstrate “a concrete and particularized injury that is fairly traceable to the challenged conduct[] and is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision.” Carney, 592 U.S. at 58 (quoting Hollingsworth v. Perry, 570 U.S. 693, 704 (2013)). And a case becomes moot “[w]hen it becomes impossible for a court to grant effective relief.” Rio Grande, 57 F.4th at 1165 (quoting Kan. Jud. Rev. v. Stout, 562 F.3d 1240, 1246 (10th Cir. 2009)).

Like the district court, we consider plaintiffs’ claims in two groups, beginning with the claims asserted for the first time in the amended complaint. The district court found that plaintiffs lacked standing as to these new claims based on their failure to allege the injury component. An injury is “an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized; and (b) ‘actual or imminent, not “conjectural” or “hypothetical.””⁵ Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992) (citations omitted) (quoting Whitmore v. Arkansas, 495 U.S. 149, 155 (1990)). “[A] grievance that amounts to nothing more than an abstract and generalized harm to a citizen’s interest in the proper application of the law does not count as an ‘injury[-]in[-]fact.’”⁵ Carney, 592 U.S. at 58.

Plaintiffs first argue, as they did below, that they “were injured by complying with unconstitutional orders or violating them at the risk of prosecution.” Apl’t. Br. 30. Stated differently, plaintiffs say that they “suffered [an] actual injury-in-fact by enduring the State’s months-long invasion of the [c]hurch’s First and Fourteenth Amendment interests” via the orders imposing COVID-19 restrictions on them. Rep. Br. 3. But as the district court explained, that alleged injury has come and gone: the complained-of orders imposing COVID-19 restrictions on plaintiffs are no longer in force. This is critical because plaintiffs seek prospective—not retrospective—relief.

⁵ Standing is typically assessed as of the date the complaint is filed. See Rio Grande, 57 F.4th at 1161. The district court concluded that the appropriate point of reference for the newly asserted claims is the date that plaintiffs filed their amended complaint. Plaintiffs do not challenge that conclusion, so we accept it for purposes of this appeal. See Atlas Biologicals, Inc. v. Kutrubes, 50 F.4th 1307, 1322 (10th Cir. 2022) (explaining that it is plaintiffs’ burden to establish jurisdiction and “a federal court is not obliged ‘to conjure up possible theories’ to support subject-matter jurisdiction” (quoting Raley v. Hyundai Motor Co., 642 F.3d 1271, 1275 (10th Cir. 2011))).

See Collins v. Daniels, 916 F.3d 1302, 1314 (10th Cir. 2019) (“Plaintiffs have the burden to demonstrate standing for each form of relief sought.” (quoting Lippoldt v. Cole, 468 F.3d 1204, 1216 (10th Cir. 2006))). That is, plaintiffs do not seek relief for their asserted past injuries; instead, they ask for a declaration about the legality of certain statutes going forward. See PeTA, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals v. Rasmussen, 298 F.3d 1198, 1202 n.2 (10th Cir. 2002) (explaining that declaratory relief is retrospective only “to the extent that it is intertwined with a claim for monetary damages that requires us to declare whether a past constitutional violation occurred”). And even though “plaintiff[s] may present evidence of a past injury to establish standing for retrospective relief, [they] must demonstrate a continuing injury to establish standing for prospective relief.”⁶ Jordan v. Sosa, 654 F.3d 1012, 1019 (10th Cir. 2011) (emphases added); see also PeTA, 298 F.3d at 1202–03 (noting that plaintiffs may “lose their standing for claims for prospective relief” if, during litigation, “an event occurs that heals the injury”). Thus, plaintiffs’ alleged past injuries do not “demonstrate a continuing injury to establish standing for prospective relief,” which is the only kind of relief plaintiffs seek.⁷ Jordan, 654 F.3d

⁶ Plaintiffs purport to challenge this legal proposition, contending that a claim seeking prospective declaratory relief can be based on a past injury. But we have expressly held to the contrary, explaining that even though “a complaint for nominal damages [for a past injury] could satisfy Article III’s case[-]or[-]controversy requirements, . . . a functionally identical claim for declaratory relief will not.” Utah Animal Rts. Coal. Salt Lake City Corp., 371 F.3d 1248, 1257 (10th Cir. 2004).

⁷ Plaintiffs briefly assert that their past injuries resulted in “a continuing injury due to the fact [that] some church members never returned after the lockdown.” Aplt. Br. 27. But even assuming that the loss of church members could constitute a continuing injury (a proposition that plaintiffs fail to develop or provide authority

To be sure, a slightly lower threshold applies when assessing injury for pre-enforcement First Amendment claims. See Peck v. McCann, 43 F.4th 1116, 1129 (10th Cir. 2022). Under this lower standard, a plaintiff must allege an intention to engage in constitutionally protected conduct proscribed by statute and a credible threat of future prosecution, plus ongoing injury resulting from this chilling effect. See id. But here, as the district court concluded, “the amended complaint contains no plausible allegations that . . . plaintiffs are avoiding engaging in any activity they have previously engaged in based on an objectively justified fear of future enforcement.” App. vol. 3, 656. Nor have plaintiffs “adequately alleged that they are subject to a credible threat of enforcement of any public-health restrictions that may proscribe protected religious or expressive conduct in the future.” Id. at 654. And there is nothing in the challenged statutes themselves “that prohibits or restricts . . . plaintiffs from engaging in religious activities.” Id. at 656.

Plaintiffs do not dispute these propositions on appeal. In fact, they seemingly disavow any reliance on imminent injuries and disclaim any pre-enforcement First Amendment challenge, stating that their amended complaint “is not a ‘pre[-]enforcement action.’” Aplt. Br. 30. In other words, plaintiffs do not seek to establish standing under the lower First Amendment threshold and instead stake for), plaintiffs do not allege that such loss is traceable to defendants’ conduct or that it is likely to be redressed by a favorable judicial decision, as they must to establish standing. See Carney, 592 U.S. at 58.

standing on their alleged actual injuries, which occurred in the past, are not ongoing, and do not establish standing for the prospective relief they seek.

In sum, that plaintiffs’ newly asserted claims challenge various existing state statutes is not enough to confer standing: the “mere presence on the statute books of an unconstitutional statute . . . does not entitle anyone to sue.” Winsness v. Yocom, 433 F.3d 727, 732 (10th Cir. 2006). This is true even for plaintiffs’ newly asserted facial challenges because we have made clear that “[a] plaintiff bringing a facial challenge to a statute . . . must . . . establish an injury-in-fact sufficient to satisfy Article III’s case-or-controversy requirement.” Ward v. Utah, 321 F.3d 1263, 1267 (10th Cir. 2003). Plaintiffs have not done so here, so they lack standing for such claims.

We next consider plaintiffs’ reasserted claims challenging the CDEA on free-exercise grounds. For the as-applied claim, we agree with the district court that such claim is moot, as we previously held. See Cmty. Baptist Church, 2022 WL 200661, at *6–7.

For the facial claim, we agree with the district court that plaintiffs fail to state a claim. In so holding, the district court determined (as we suggested in deciding plaintiffs’ prior appeal, see id. at *8–9) that the CDEA was neutral, generally applicable, and survived the resulting rational-basis review. See Grace United Methodist Church v. City of Cheyenne, 451 F.3d 643, 649 (10th Cir. 2006) (explaining rational-basis review of neutral, generally applicable laws, as compared to strict-scrutiny review of laws or policies that are not neutral or generally applicable).

Plaintiffs dispute only the general applicability of the CDEA, relying for support on the Supreme Court’s recent ruling in Kennedy v. Bremerton School District, 597 U.S. 507 (2022). But that case doesn’t help plaintiffs. There, the Court held that the challenged practice (prohibiting a football coach from leading a prayer on the field after a game) was “neither neutral nor generally applicable” because the defendant school district “sought to restrict [the coach’s] actions at least in part because of their religious character.” Kennedy, 597 U.S. at 526. Such facts sharply contrast with plaintiffs’ allegations about the CDEA. As the district court put it, the “amended complaint does not allege that the law is discriminatorily motivated or constitutes an official expression of hostility to religion.” App. vol. 3, 651 n.4; see also Grace United, 451 F.3d at 649–50 (“A law is neutral so long as its object is something other than the infringement or restriction of religious practices.”); Axson-Flynn v. Johnson, 356 F.3d 1277, 1294 (10th Cir. 2004) (noting that rule motivated by discrimination is not neutral or generally applicable). To be sure, the CDEA contains some limited secular exemptions, but we previously explained why those exemptions were far less broad than plaintiffs would have it. See Cmty. Baptist Church, 2022 WL 200661, at *9. And plaintiffs advance no reason to question our prior reasoning. Indeed, although plaintiffs baldly assert on appeal that the CDEA “allow[s them] to be punished for ‘personal religious observance,’” Aplt. Br. 36 (quoting Kennedy, 597 U.S. at 543), they “have not pointed to any part of the law that . . . prohibits any religious conduct or burdens their religious practice in any way,”

App. vol. 3, 651 n.4. We therefore agree with the district court that plaintiffs fail to state a claim that the CDEA facially violates the Free Exercise Clause.

Conclusion

Plaintiffs' newly asserted claims are not justiciable because plaintiffs fail to show the requisite injury for Article III standing. As for plaintiffs' reasserted free-exercise challenges to the CDEA, their as-applied claim is moot, and they fail to state a facial claim. We thus affirm the district court's order dismissing plaintiffs' amended complaint.

GRACE BIBLE FELLOWSHIP, et al.,

Plaintiffs - Appellants,

v.

JARED POLIS, in his official capacity as Governor, State of Colorado, et al.,

Defendants - Appellees.

No. 23-1148
(D.C. No. 1:20-CV-02362-DDD-NRN)
(D. Colo.)

ORDER

Before MORITZ, MURPHY, and CARSON, Circuit Judges.

Appellants' petition for rehearing is denied.

The petition for rehearing en banc was transmitted to all of the judges of the court who are in regular active service. As no member of the panel and no judge in regular active service on the court requested that the court be polled, that petition is also denied.
